Nation remains split on 'Obamacare'

Anniversary finds Democrats rushing to meet deadline, Republicans aloof

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – Three years, two elections, and one Supreme Court decision after President Barack Obama signed the Affordable Care Act, its promise of health care for the uninsured may be delayed or undercut in much of the country because of entrenched opposition from many Republican state leaders.

In half the states, mainly led by Democrats, officials are racing deadlines to connect uninsured residents to coverage now only months away. In others it's as if "Obamacare" — signed Mar. 23, 2010 — had never passed.

Make no mistake, the federal government will step in and create new insurance markets in the 26 mostly red states declining to run their own. Just like the state-run markets in mostly Democratic-led states, the feds will start signing up customers Oct. 1 for coverage effective Jan. 1. But they need a broad cross-section of people, or else the pool will be stuck with what the government calls the "sick and worried" — the costliest patients.

Insurance markets, or exchanges, are one prong of Obama's law, providing subsidized private coverage for middle-class households who currently can't get their own. The other major piece is a Medicaid expansion to serve more low-income people. And at least 13 states have already indicated they will not agree to that.

"It could look like two or three different countries," said Robert Blendon, a Harvard School of Public Health professor who studies public opinion on health care. "The political culture of a state is going to play an important role in getting millions of people to voluntarily sign up."

Civic leadership — from governors, legislators, mayors and business and religious groups — is shaping up as a huge factor in the launch of Obama's plan, particularly since the penalty for ignoring the law's requirement to get coverage is as low as $95 the first year.

People-to-people contacts will be key, and the potential for patchwork results is real.

"Obviously it's a possibility in terms of there being some real

House passes budget measure

Furloughs, cuts promised

By Andrew Taylor
Associated Press

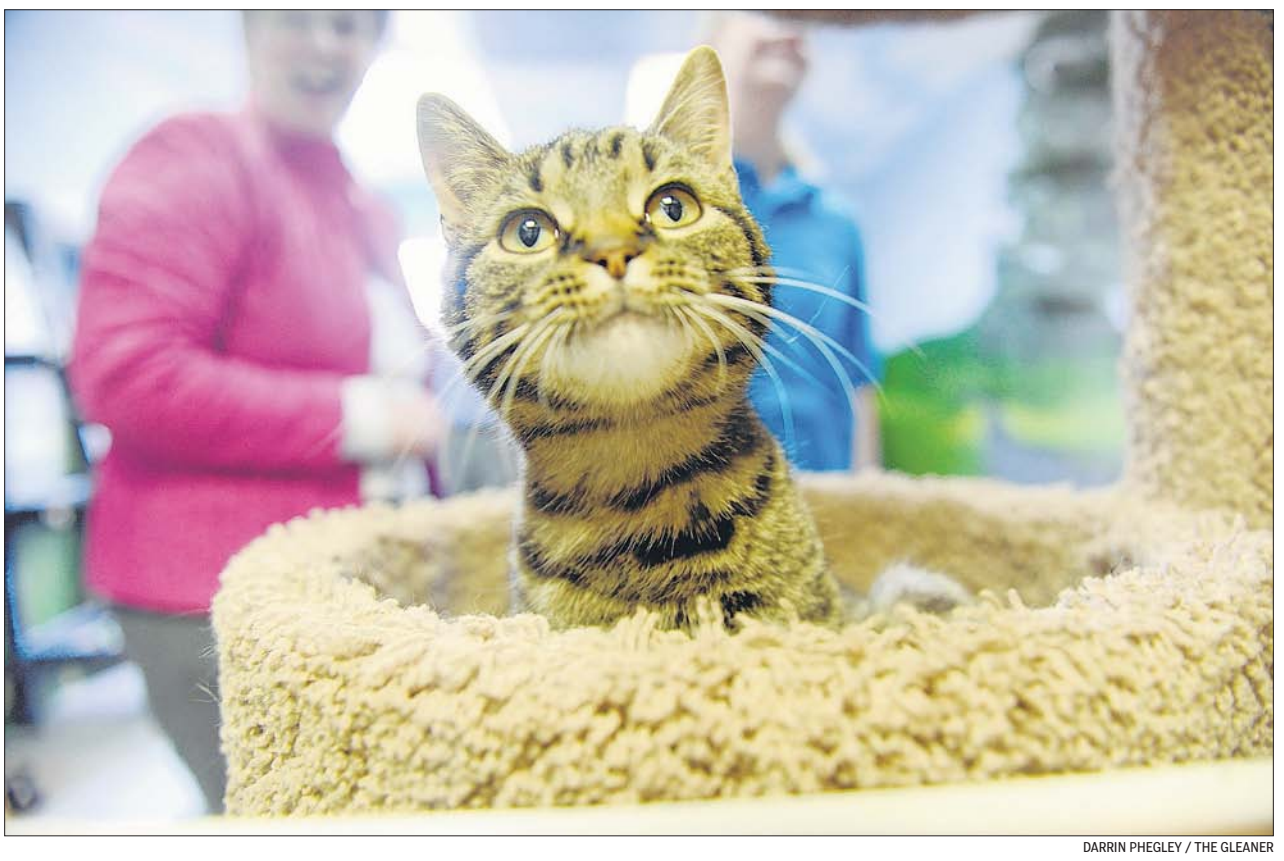

WASHINGTON – Moving on two fronts, the Republican-controlled House on Thursday voted to keep the government running for the next six months while pushing through a tea-party flavored budget for next year that would shrink the government by another $4.6 trillion over the next decade.

The spending authorization on its way to the White House for President Barack Obama's signature leaves in place $85 billion in spending cuts to the Pentagon and domestic agencies. The result will be temporary furloughs for hundreds of thousands of federal workers and contractors over the next six months and interrupted, slower or halted services and aid for many Americans.

The nonbinding GOP budget plan for 2014 and beyond calls for a balanced budget in 10 years' time and sharp cuts in safety-net programs for the poor and other domestic programs.

Thursday's developments demonstrated the split nature of this year's budget debate. Competing nonbinding budget measures by each party provide platforms for political principles; at the same time Capitol Hill leaders forged a bipartisan deal on carrying out the government's core responsibilities, in this case providing money for agencies to operate and preventing a

Humane society gets boost

Anonymous $25,000 gift sets up endowment

Humane Society of Henderson County executive director Kent Preston, second from left, and board president Josh Williams, left, show off the shelter's new free-roaming cat room that was built by an Eagle Scout, after Community Foundation of West Kentucky's executive director Tony Watkins, right, and Community Foundation of Henderson's director of fund development Chase Fulcher, not pictured, announced the anonymous donation of $25,000 to establish an endowment fund for the humane society Wednesday afternoon. Judy Hayden, the humane society's board secretary, is at center.

An anonymous donor has provided the means for the Humane Society of Henderson County to have a $25,000 endowment to help fund on-going operations of the agency.

The endowment will be established in the Community Foundation of Henderson, an affiliate of Community Foundation of West Kentucky. The gift was presented by Chase Fulcher, Community Foundation of Henderson's director of fund development and public relations, and Tony Watkins, executive director of the Community Foundation of West Kentucky.

The Henderson Community Foundation originated with the Henderson Leadership Initiative and has already raised approximately $1.7 million. One of the ways the money is used is by providing matching funds so local non-profits can set up endowments.

"We can't use the money all at once," noted Josh Cromer, operations manager of the humane society shelter. "We can use the interest from investing," adding that the money will be invested conservatively to ensure it provides the maximum support of meeting the needs of the shelter.

"It was great to see that endowment come through," Cromer said. "Dealing with homeless animals day in and day out we can't always worry about where our money comes from. This money takes off some of the burden of keeping these animals alive."

The Humane Society of Henderson County is a private, nonprofit animal welfare organization that cares for more than 2,400 animals each year.

The mission of the humane society is to end companion animal homelessness, to provide the highest quality service and compassion to the animals entrusted to its care, and to be a leader in promoting humane values.

Childhood educators encourage preparation

Kindergartners must have early verbal interaction

By Erin Schmitt

Think of the brain like a highway.

Connections are built after birth based on what a child is exposed to early in life, explained Rick Hulefeld, the chair of Kentucky's Early Childhood Advisory Council. Most brain connections are formed by the time a child is three and a half.

The brain of a child who is read to at an early age and is part of a lot of verbal interaction will develop to handle language skills in school.

"This child has the brain connections like a superhighway in their brain," Hulefeld said. "You can run that semi down that superhighway as fast as you want."

On the flip side, a child who never gets read to and hears mostly one-word sentences from adults will not have a brain as developed for language skills. Hulefeld compared it to trying to navigate cow paths slowly with a jeep.

State educators are encouraging everyone to give children the right tools, so they will be prepared when they arrive in kindergarten. Hulefeld and 27 other early childhood educators were at the Henderson Fine Arts Center Thursday to tour the Reggio Emilia exhibit on early childhood learning.

"Kids who arrive at school ready to do well, will probably go on and do well all the way through

Deaths

The Rev. Gordon Lee Morrison

EASTON, Md. – The Rev. Gordon Lee Morrison, 73, Easton, passed away on Tuesday, March 19, 2013, from complications following an automobile accident.

Born March 16, 1940, in Princeton, Ind., Gordon was the son of the late Leland and Ruth Morrison. After graduating from Indiana University with a BA in philosophy in 1960, Gordon struck out to see the world. He served briefly as a youth minister in Union City, Tenn., while attending the Cumberland Presbyterian Seminary in nearby Martin. But when the seminary moved to Memphis, he volunteered for the Peace Corps and served in Iran from 1964 to 1966.

While training new Peace Corps volunteers in the Florida Keys, Gordon met Returned Guatemala Volunteer Lynda Sanderford, and they were married 90 days later in Chapel Hill, North Carolina. They spent their first year together in Derby Hollow, Va., where Gordon worked with rural community development for the Methodist Church and preached as a circuit rider on Sundays. Gordon then returned to Iran with Lynda and they worked in Isfahan, Iran, as missionaries of the Episcopal Church for three years.

A tireless steward of God's creation, Gordon received an MS in environmental education and parks administration from Indiana University in Bloomington and was a parks administrator in both Minneapolis, Minn., and the Chicago area in the 1970s.

But Gordon's Christian faith drew him back to formal ministry. He received his Master of Divinity from The University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn., in 1984, and was ordained to the priesthood. Over the past 25 years, he has been the rector at several Episcopal parishes: St. Stephen's in Eutaw, Ala.; St. Paul's in Selma, Ala.; St. John's and St. Barnabas in Odessa, Texas; and for 10 years at St. Paul's in Henderson. More recently, he served as assistant rector at Christ Church in Easton, Md., and after a partial retirement, worked at St. Peter's in Salisbury, Md. and St. Paul's in Trappe, Md.

Father Morrison's exuberant embrace of life and extroverted personality made him the center of attention at practically every gathering. He was a beloved leader of the many congregations he served. Gordon was also an intrepid traveler, avid reader and deep thinker about the theological connections between Christianity and Islam. He is missed dearly by his family, with whom he was exceptionally close, as well as by friends and the many people he served as a priest.

Also known as "BawBaw," Gordon is survived by his wife, Lynda; his son, Gregory Morrison, currently in Dublin, Ireland, with his wife, Elizabeth, and their sons Gabriel, Luke and John; his son, Christopher Morrison, who with his wife, Rachel, and daughters Ada Jane and Margaret Ruth, live in Washington, D.C.; and two sisters, Rita Knight and Joan Bailey, both of Oakland City, Ind.

The family will receive friends from 4 to 6 p.m. Sunday at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on Main Street in Trappe, Md. A vigil will continue at St. Paul's until 8 p.m.

A funeral service will be held at 10 a.m. Monday at Christ Church, 111 S. Harrison St., Easton, Md. 21601. Burial will be in White Marsh Cemetery on Route 50 in Trappe.

Expressions of sympathy may take the form of contributions in Gordon's honor made to the Izaak Walton League at www.iwla.org, or to Episcopal Relief and Development at www.er-d.org.

Arrangements are being handled by Fellows, Helfenbein & Newnam Funeral Home, P.A., 200 S. Harrison St., Easton, MD 21601.

Union County holding elementary dance concert Saturday night

Gleaner staff

MORGANFIELD – All three of Union County elementary schools will be featured tonight in an elementary dance concert.

The concert begins at 7 p.m. in the Union County High School auditorium. The 45 participating students have been rehearsing for 10 weeks, according to a news release.

The students will perform an energetic display and combination of dance techniques.

The concert will include group dance, girls dance and all-boys action hero sequence.

Mark Lamb, a Union County native and the concert's dance instructor, has been teaching for more than 20 years. Lamb is the artistic director of Mark Lamb Dance in New York.

His methods combine strong technique, creative dance and improvisation as a means to develop a well-rounded dancer.

Wilson fourth in state archery tourney

Ashton Wilson

A story in Thursday's Gleaner about National Archery in the Schools Program Kentucky tournament results didn't include a photograph of one of the Henderson archers who placed in the competition, which was held in Louisville on Monday and Tuesday.

Bend Gate Elementary fifth-grader Ashton Wilson took fourth place in her division with a score of 282.

Memorial service set for Rev. Morrison

A memorial service will take place in Henderson on Monday to honor the late Rev. Gordon Morrison, former rector at St. Paul's Episcopal Church here.

Morrison died Tuesday in Washington, D.C., from injuries suffered in a car accident on March 14.

The service will take place at 6 p.m. Monday at St. Paul's, followed by a time of sharing and remembrance. The public is invited.

Memorial gifts may be made to the Rector's Discretionary Fund at St. Paul's. Gifts will be donated to the All Saints Camp and Conference Center, a diocesan facility near Leitchfield.

A handful of Henderson County High School students have received top honors for the Family, Career and Community Leaders of America program.

A regional "Students Taking Action with Recognition" (STAR) competition was recently held at the high school. STAR events recognize FCCLA students for proficiency and achievement in chapter and individual projects, leadership skills and career preparation.

The following students are Region 3 FCCLA STARS: Macy Goodley, promote and publicize FCCLA; Jennifer Ardnell, national programs in action; William Burns, team culinary; Randall Regan, team culinary; and Destiny Thomas, team culinary.

Burns, Regan and Thomas will all advance to the state competition held March 25-27 in Louisville.

Kentucky jobless rate holding steady

FRANKFORT – Kentucky's jobless rate is holding steady at 7.9 percent even though about 150 fewer people overall had jobs in the state in February.

The Kentucky Office of Employment and Training released those findings Thursday.

Kentucky's manufacturing sector added 3,100 jobs in February, besting all others. The leisure and hospitality sector grew by 2,300 jobs. And the educational and health services sector gained 1,200 jobs.

The state's information sector, which includes print and broadcast media, lost 1,000 jobs in February. The financial services sector was down by 600 jobs. And the mining and logging sector shed another 300 jobs.

State dedicates 61st nature preserve

FRANKFORT – Kentucky now has its 61st nature preserve.

The Kentucky State Nature Preserves Commission recently dedicated the 1,800-acre site, which is called the Archer Benge State Nature Preserve. The new preserve sits along Laurel Fork in Whitley County.

Staff and wire reports

Free work readiness test offered

Special to The Gleaner

An important education and workforce credential test will be free to eligible Kentuckians on a first-come, first-served basis through June 15 or until funds are expended.

Testing to earn a National Career Readin ess Certificate (NCRC) is being offered free to veterans, people with disabilities and anyone who has been unemployed for more than 26 weeks.

The assessments are sponsored by the state Department of Workforce Investment, an agency of the Kentucky Education and Workforce Development Cabinet.

"If you're looking for a job or need a better one, now's the time to take advantage of this opportunity to earn one of the most acknowledged job skill certifications in the country," said Michelle Drake, the business services manager for the Green River Area Development District.

NCRC is a national certification that indicates work readiness by administering three WorkKeys assessments: applied mathematics, locating information and reading for information. These specific workplace skills are needed in 77 percent of all jobs profiled for WorkKeys testing.

By using NCRC, employers can give their current and future workforce incentive to improve their skills to be eligible for more demanding and lucrative work.

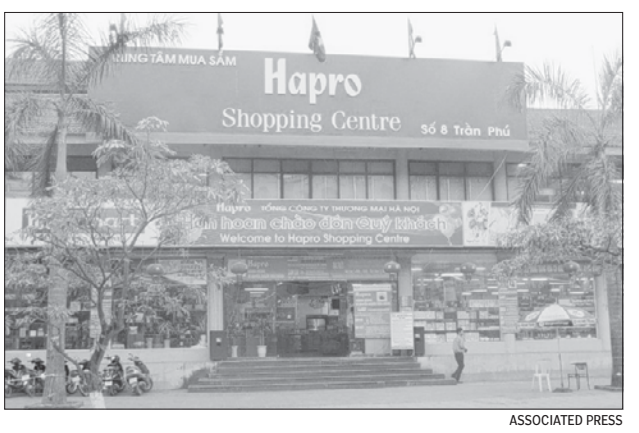

Eligible individuals can obtain free NCRC testing through local One-Stop Career Centers. This offer is time and space limited, so those interested should schedule through one of the following testing locations before June 1 and should request a "free NCRC":

- Henderson Career Center at Henderson Community College, 826-0427.
- Owensboro Career Center, 121 E. Second St., (270) 685-0210

NCRC is a division of ACT, which also conducts a major college-readiness test given in Kentucky and other states. For more information, visit www.NationalCareerReadiness.org

High school rings bought in Vietnam remain mysteries

By Janet Cappiello
Associated Press

ASSOCIATED PRESS
This photo shows the shopping center in Thai Binh City, Vietnam, where Rick Dunn, a Pennsylvania contractor, bought a 1970 Montgomery County High School ring that was for sale in a jewelry case. Dunn and school officials in Montgomery County, Ky., have been searching for the ring's owner for more than a year.

LOUISVILLE – They could have been lost forever, long-forgotten mementoes from home perhaps worn on a finger or carried in a pocket for good luck.

Somehow, the two 1970s-era high school rings found their way into the hands of jewelry merchants in Vietnam. Now, they are waiting in Kentucky for their original owners.

"My first thought that crossed my mind was, 'You know, this ring might have come off a dead American soldier.' That's the first thing I thought about," said Dan Cherry, a retired Air Force brigadier general who has one of the rings at his home in Bowling Green.

"You stop and think all the places this ring has been? From the beginning? It's amazing."

The other ring has been sitting on the desk of Donna McGuire, spokeswoman for the Montgomery County school system, for more than a year.

McGuire recently posted a note on the system's Facebook page in search of the owner of the 1970 Montgomery County High School ring. The note attracted attention from local media outlets, but no clues.

That ring was languishing in a Vietnam store when a U.S. contractor working in Thai Binh City spotted it in February 2012.

Rick Dunn of Easton, Penn., haggled a bit with the merchant, then bought it for about $30.

"For me, this is only about returning the ring to its owner especially if it was tied to the war back in the early '70s," he wrote in an email to The Associated Press earlier this week.

The silver-toned ring with a red stone sported an image of an Indian on the side — the mascot at Montgomery County High.

"One thing you will say when you finish this is that you don't get this kind of email every day," Dunn wrote in an email that month McGuire, telling her of his discovery.

Soon after, Dunn mailed the ring to McGuire. It still sits on her desk in Mount Sterling, Ky. It has no identifying marks such as initials, but an image of an eagle can be seen through the stone.

She is convinced the ring belonged to a member of the 1970 graduating class because of the eagle feature. At that time, several schools had consolidated, and one of them had an eagle as a mascot.

An Internet search for personal items of U.S. military personnel found in Vietnam turns up a plethora of dog tags, and at least one website, www.topvietnamveterans.org , has lists of dog tags in its possession.

There are often concerns that such items are counterfeit, and no one has investigated that possibility with the rings. But McGuire said the ring appears to be legitimate.

"It looks like the real deal. It has '925 sterling' stamped inside, and I've had people from the class tell me that it looks like their ring. Why would someone make a counterfeit Montgomery County High School Class of 1970 class ring?" she said.

Dunn said the detail appeared to be too intricate for it to be counterfeit.

The ring in Cherry's possession is well-worn and has the name "Jostens" etched inside — the name of one of the nation's largest manufacturers of class rings.

"I never looked into that because it looks so authentic," he said.

Cherry received the ring as a gift from a friend, Nguyen Hong My, a former Vietnamese war pilot. Hong

My told his friend he bought it in a jewelry shop simply because he liked it.

The ring has no identifying marks or initials.

The two men hoped to personally return the ring to its original owner, even going so far as to obtain a list of all the members of the school's class of 1972 who joined the military. So far, their search has been unsuccessful.

In the case of the Montgomery County ring, McGuire said the school district doesn't have any copies of the 1970 Montgomery High School yearbook.

She showed the ring to the director of the local history museum, who also happened to be a 1970 Montgomery High School graduate, but he wasn't able to help, she said.

"And I talked to a couple of former principals to see if they could remember what kids would've been there, and I really didn't have much luck," she said.

Dunn said this week he remains hopeful the ring will find its rightful owner, and he has since purchased another ring he found in Vietnam that he hopes he can return.

Cave won't be destroyed for landfill

The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE – A central Kentucky cave won't be destroyed for the purpose of building a landfill.

LG&E and KU Energy had proposed the landfill on 218 acres of land it owns in Trimble County.

A cave that was discovered on the property in 2011 put the plans on hold because caves are generally protected under Kentucky law.

The Courier Journal reports state environmental regulators issued a preliminary decision that was made public Wednesday to deny a permit for the landfill because of the cave.

Too many of us doing too little for retirement

The U.S. is facing a retirement crisis. The simple fact is that most workers are saving too little to retire, according to the Employee Benefits Research Institute (EBRI), which tracks pension issues. And workers are acutely aware of this.

An institute study out Tuesday found that the percentage of workers saving for retirement dropped to 66 percent from 75 percent in 2009. One-third said they had saved nothing for retirement.

Of those surveyed, 28 percent had no confidence that they would have enough to retire comfortably and 21 percent were "not too confident." So about half of American workers are facing retirement with considerable economic uncertainty, and with good reason: 57 percent of the workers surveyed reported less than $25,000 in household savings and investments.

Meanwhile, many of those facing a pinched retirement, about 36 percent, planned to work beyond the minimum retirement age for Social Security of 62. But those plans might not always work out. The largest group of retirees does so at 62; only 14 percent retired after 65. EBRI says 47 percent of retirees left the workforce unexpectedly, because of health issues, job loss or disabilities.

Living only on Social Security guarantees a frugal retirement. Benefits max out at $1,320 a month, $15,840 a year, at age 70. And Congress may shave that formula for future retirees.

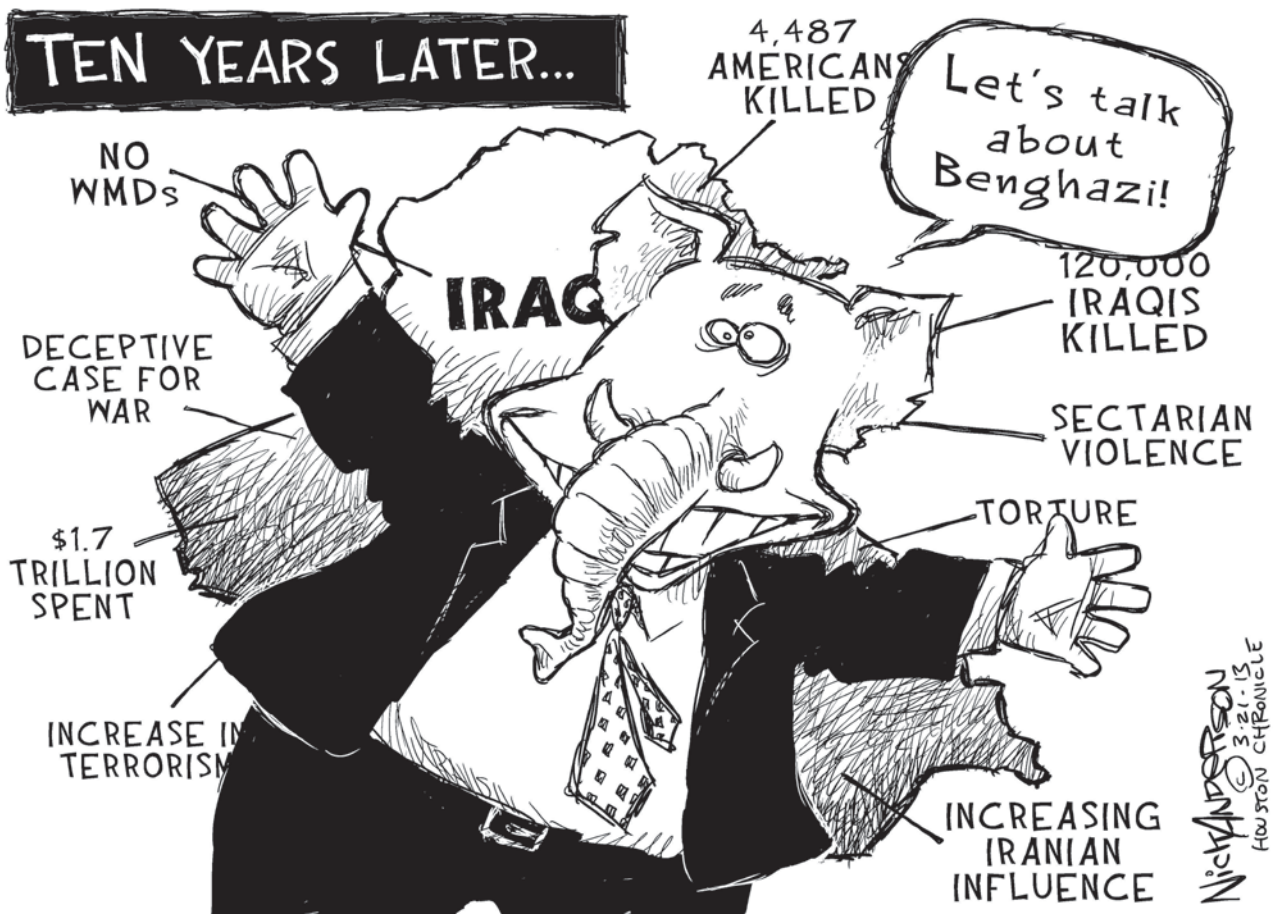

At one time, workers relied on traditional company pension plans, but those have almost disappeared. In fact, EBRI left them out of calculations because only 3 percent of workers are still covered by them.

Those traditional plans have been replaced in part by plans such as 401(k)s, but workers tend to dip into them for emergencies and other nonretirement purposes. Retirees can no longer count on high interest rates on their savings to generate income.

Retirement money has to stretch further because we're living longer. According to a report by the Society of Actuaries, a male who turns 65 this year can expect to live another 20.5 years, a female another 22.7, an increase of roughly a year each over the decade.

The problem is no less real for being slow-moving, but it's better to deal with the retirement financial crunch sooner rather than later, whether through better savings instruments, more incentives to save or even mandatory savings requirements.

As anyone over 65 can attest, you're old before you know it.

Consider your public school experience — if you had one, and most of us did — and consider why some people would be happy to do away with public schools for nearly everyone.

Of course, all of our experiences were different. I'm a middle-class white guy who grew up in a small town in Texas when public schools were reasonably, if modestly, funded. Our facilities were suitable and the spirit of my high school was, for the most part, positive and aspirational — the assumption was that many of us would go to college, and many of us did.

We read a few good books, studied math and history, did a lot of writing, and learned enough to survive or thrive in college and suitably conduct the life of a good American citizen.

Of course, a great deal has changed since the days of my Mayberrian youth. Schools are much more diverse and we ask a lot more of them. By their natures, schools are conservative, which means that they feel obligated to teach traditional bodies of knowledge and skills — history and reading and writing, for example. Unfortunately, these things are less and less central to ordinary American life. In our culture at large, drugs are more available and sexuality is unbridled. None of this is the fault of public schools, but it makes their jobs much more challenging.

Furthermore, as anti-government rhetoric has surged in recent years, public schools, which are generally supported by local, state and federal money, provide an obvious target.

Because most of what schools produce is essentially invisible and very difficult to measure; because not everything they teach is directly connected to a practical, utilitarian good; because we Americans still harbor a significant and well-documented strain of anti-intellectualism; and because people with enough money to send their kids to private schools often begrudge the taxes that are spent on public education, well, you can see why public schools must sometimes feel as if they have a bull's eye on their backs.

My home state, Texas, is a good example. During the last few years, state support for public schools has dropped by at least $5 billion. Teachers have been laid off and class sizes have been increased. Despite a projected budget surplus of close to $9 billion this year, there's little prospect that funding for public schools will be restored.

On the contrary, this month State Sen. Dan Patrick of Houston filed Senate Bill 23, which is titled, "An Act relating to the establishment of the Texas Equal Opportunity Scholarship Program."

Proposals to provide vouchers to the parents of public school students haven't generated enough traction in Texas to become law. For "voucher," therefore, SB 23 substitutes the more benign term, "opportunity scholarship." And rather than providing money for vouchers directly from the public coffers, it relies on donations from private businesses to provide "scholarships" to families making as much as $85,000 per year. In turn, the businesses receive state tax credits.

On its own, SB 23 isn't likely to bring public education in Texas to its knees. But it's a start. And 11 other states already have similar programs, reflecting the concerted effort to strangle public services of all sorts.

Few institutions have done more to promote equality of opportunity and the well-being of our society than public education. We've always known how to produce good public schools, and in our richest neighborhoods we still do so.

The challenge is to produce good schools for everyone. But efforts to gradually drain and drown public education often reflect an ill-conceived ideology rather than concern for students, who would be better served by a genuine commitment to good public education.

Patriot workers can see future in Kodak

I have been reading with interest the stories about Patriot Coal cutti ng health insurance for retirees.

My wife and I both worked for Kodak. Both retired with 30 plus years of service.

Kodak filed Chapter 11 a while back. Along with other small benefits we also lost our health insurance coverage. I am old enough for Medicare and was able to get supplemental insurance that was reasonable.

My wife is not yet old enough so she had to go back to work part-time at one of the local supermarkets that is unionized and was able to get her insurance through them. But, it appears that she will have to work for several more years just to get insurance.

So, there is a precedent, and I'm sure Patriot will get what they want.

Pope Francis' outlook a breath of fresh air

BONNIE ERBE
COLUMNIST

As an observer of the world's major religious institutions — Christian, Islamic, Buddhist, Hindu and Jewish — I keep a skeptical eye trained toward religious leaders. Sure, they do much to help the world's poor. But they also control immense amounts of wealth and have political sway and the very human capacity to do wrong.

Hence, I must say I am enthralled by Pope Francis' apparent renouncement of his church's worldly wealth and his intention to steer the church back toward humility and simplicity: to become a church catering first and foremost to the poor. I never, ever thought I would see a pope choose this path.

I was amazed that at his inaugural Mass in St. Peter's Square, Francis toned down the traditional two-hour ceremony. He transformed it from a coronation — complete with a ruby- and sapphire-studded tiara — to something much more humble. Impressively, he chose a silver ring with gold plate rather than the traditional gold ring for his papacy.

His message was also more real-world and less materialistic. During Mass, he appealed to world leaders to protect poor people and the environment. He did not ride in the so-called "Popemobile," but in an open-air vehicle. At one point, he jumped out to bless a disabled man — such a stark contrast from his recent predecessor and such a refreshing turn. We know that as Cardinal Jorge Mario Bergoglio, he delighted in taking public transportation and paying his own bills. This man takes his vow of poverty seriously.

That said, we have no idea yet how Francis will translate his words into deeds. He is taking over a scandal-plagued institution. Reducing the pomp and splendor is a great first step. But what is next?

We know he publicly protested corporate greed as a cardinal. Will he continue to do so as pope? Will he sell off church assets to help feed the poor? I visited the Vatican Museum the last time I was in Rome and remember feeling aghast at the amount of wealth the church had accumulated over the millennia. I asked myself: To what end? Why does the Vatican need a huge display of ancient Egyptian artifacts, worth an untold fortune? It could sell those treasures and feed its poor.

I would love to see that, but cannot believe Francis would do such a thing. I hope to be proven wrong.

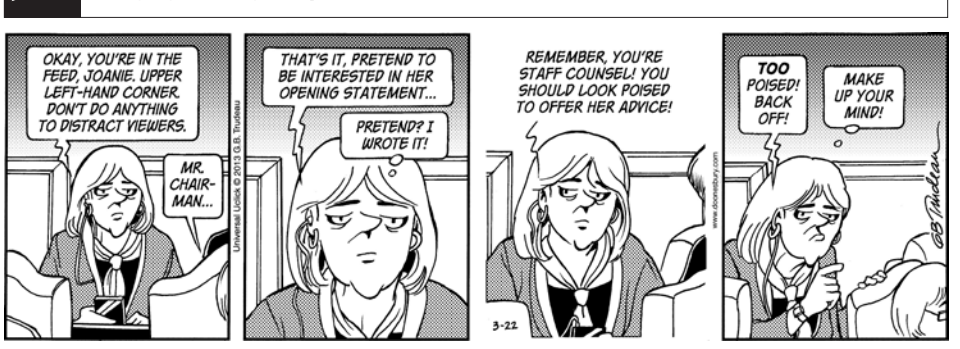

We've seen reports speculating that this pope does not plan to modernize on major social issues. As a cardinal in Argentina, he had publicly opposed gay marriage and gay adoption — but privately offered a compromise on civil unions as the "lesser of two evils," The New York Times reported, quoting Bergoglio biographer Sergio Rubin. The cardinal also was against contraception. Access to contraception and education is the only way poor women pull themselves out of poverty. In my view, opposing contraception only generates more poor people. It does not help them out of poverty.

Let's not even think about where this pope will lead his church on issues of abortion or expanding women's power in church hierarchy: to wit, allowing them to become priests. On those topics, I fear he will not modernize in the least.

It remains a complete mystery how he will handle the church's priest-pedophilia scandal and how he will reach out to the many thousands of now-adult survivors of sexual abuse by priests.

Nonetheless, Francis' start is monumental, and for that he deserves great credit.

Gun bill debate set next month

■ Expansion of background checks in plans

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – Gun control legislation the Senate debates next month will include an expansion of federal background checks for firearms buyers, Majority Leader Harry Reid said Thursday in a victory for advocates of gun restrictions.

The announcement underscores that Democrats intend to take an aggressive approach in the effort to broaden the checks, currently required only for transactions involving federally licensed firearms dealers.

President Barack Obama and many supporters of curbing guns in and out of Congress consider an expansion of the system to private gun sales to be the most effective response lawmakers could take in the wake of December's elementary school massacre in Newtown, Conn. The system is designed to keep guns from criminals, people with serious mental problems and others considered potentially dangerous.

The overall gun measure the Senate debates also will include legislation boosting penalties for illegal gun trafficking and modestly expand a grant program for school security, said Reid, D-Nev.

Reid said that during Congress' upcoming two-week break, he hopes senators will strike a bipartisan compromise on broadening background checks. But without a deal, he indicated the gun bill would include a stricter version approved this month by the Senate Judiciary Committee expanding the system to virtually all private gun transactions with few exceptions.

"I want to be clear: In order to be effective, any bill that passes the Senate must include background checks," Reid said in a written statement.

Opponents including the National Rifle Association say background checks are easily sidestepped by criminals and threaten creation of a government file on gun owners.

If not included in the overall gun bill, an expansion of background checks could have been offered as an amendment. But that would have likely meant it would have needed support from 60 of the 100 senators to prevail — a difficult hurdle for Democrats.

Chicago plans to close 54 schools

By Jason Keyser
Associated Press

CHICAGO – Chicago Public Schools officials said Thursday they plan to close 54 schools in an effort to address a $1 billion budget shortfall and improve a struggling educational system — a plan that drew the ire of parents and teachers.

District CEO Barbara Byrd-Bennett and Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel say the closures are necessary because too many CPS buildings are half-empty. The nation's third-largest district, CPS has about 403,000 students but has seats for more than 500,000, officials say. But opponents say the closures will disproportionately affect minority children and endanger students who may have to cross gang boundaries to attend school.

The plan will affect about 30,000 students, CPS officials said. They say money being spent to keep underutilized schools open could be better used to educate students elsewhere.

"Every child in every neighborhood in Chicago deserves access to a high-quality education that prepares them to succeed in life, but for too long children in certain parts of Chicago have been cheated out of the resources they need to succeed because they are in underutilized, under-resourced schools," Byrd-Bennett said. "As a former teacher and a principal, I've lived through school closings and I know that this will not be easy, but I also know that in the end this will benefit our children."

Critics say the closings are unnecessary and will devastate communities, particularly poor, minority neighborhoods.

Man let out after 20 years; case in doubt

NEW YORK – A man who spent more than two decades behind bars for the cold-blooded slaying of a Brooklyn rabbi was released Thursday into the arms of his weeping relatives after a reinvestigation by prosecutors cast serious doubt on evidence used to convict him.

"Sir, you are free to go," a judge told a smiling, white-haired David Ranta moments after prosecutors announced they supported tossing the 1991 conviction.

Ranta's pregnant daughter — a 2-year-old when he was jailed — sisters and other supporters burst into applause and swarmed him as he walked out of the courtroom. His parents had died while he was in prison.

The dramatic turnabout came after the Brooklyn district attorney's office filed paperwork Wednesday saying it supported a defense motion to vacate the murder conviction and dismiss the indictment. After a recent review, they said they "no longer have sufficient evidence to prove the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt."

Zumba pimp gets 20 days for his part

PORTLAND – An insurance agent who helped run a prostitution operation out of his mistress's Zumba studio and watched sex videos made with a hidden camera will serve 20 days in jail for a scandal that rocked a seaside community better known for its beaches and sea captains' homes than for crime.

Mark Strong Sr. told the judge Thursday that he was sorry for the pain he caused his family, and his wife broke down in sobs during a plea for leniency.

"This was not a man in love. This was not a voyeur. This was a hard-nosed businessman," said Deputy York County District Attorney Justina McGettigan, who asked the judge to sentence Strong to 364 days in jail, noting that the prostitution continued even after police raided Wright's studio, office and apartment in Kennebunk.

Superior Court Justice Nancy Mills imposed a 20-day sentence on the first count of promotion of prostitution and concurrent sentences on the remaining 12 misdemeanor counts. She also imposed $3,000 in fines.

Mom enlists kid in crime; kid too smart

UPPER DARBY – Police say a Philadelphia-area woman returned to a dollar store where she'd been banned and pepper-sprayed employees who tried to escort her out before giving the can to her 7-year-old daughter and asking her to continue the fight.

Upper Darby police say 27-year-old Delaina Garling went to the Family Dollar Store on Monday, a place she'd been banned from for alleged theft. When employees tried to escort her out, police say she doused them with pepper spray.

Police Superintendent Michael Chitwood says after employees tackled Garling, she handed the can to her daughter and said: "You know what to do, baby. Spray it!" Chitwood says the girl never used the spray.

Garling is charged with simple assault and other counts. A telephone message left for her was not immediately returned.

Cyberattack probe finds Chinese link

SEOUL – Investigators have traced a coordinated cyberattack that paralyzed tens of thousands of computers at six South Korean banks and media companies to a Chinese Internet Protocol address, but it was still unclear who orchestrated the attack, authorities in Seoul said Thursday.

The discovery did not erase suspicions that North Korea was to blame. An IP address can provide an important clue as to the location of an Internet-connected computer but can easily be manipulated by hackers operating anywhere in the world.

The investigation into Wednesday's attack could take weeks.

By Thursday, only one of the six targets, Shinhan Bank, was back online and operating regularly. It could be next week before the other companies have fully recovered. North Korea has threatened Seoul and Washington in recent days over U.N. sanctions imposed for its Feb. 12 nuclear test, and over ongoing U.S.-South Korean military drills.

Kurds' rebel leader urges peaceful path

ANKARA – In a major step toward ending one of the world's longest, bloodiest insurgencies, the Kurds' jailed rebel leader called Thursday for a "new era" of peace that includes an immediate cease-fire and the withdrawal of thousands of his fighters from Turkey.

Abdullah Ocalan's rebel group, the Kurdistan Workers' Party, or PKK, has been waging a nearly 30-year battle against the Turkish government, seeking autonomy and greater rights.

The fight has killed tens of thousands of people and the group is considered a terror organization by Turkey and its Western allies, including the United States. The Turkish government reacted cautiously but Ocalan's announcement at a Kurdish spring festival was met with joy from the hundreds of thousands who gathered to hear it in Diyarbakir, the largest city in Turkey's mainly Kurdish southeast.

Bombing at camp kills at least 13

PESHAWAR – A car packed with explosives blew up inside a refugee camp Thursday, killing 13 people in an attack that underscored the intensity of the conflict between the government and militants in northwestern Pakistan where refugees are sometimes caught in the middle of the fighting.

The Taliban have been waging a bloody insurgency against the government in an attempt to establish an Islamic state and end Pakistan's cooperation with the United States in fighting militancy.

The blast occurred in Jalozai camp, about 19 miles southwest of Peshawar, one of three camps in Pakistan for people displaced by the fighting in the northwest.

Militants often don't want residents to flee an area of conflict, partly because it deprives them of a civilian population where they can hide and undermines their claim that they have local support.

In addition to the 13 killed, another 25 people were wounded in the blast police officials said.

Suicide bombing kills top pro-Assad Sunni preacher

By ZEINA KARAM
Associated Press

BEIRUT – A suicide bomb ripped through a mosque in the heart of the Syrian capital Thursday, killing a top Sunni Muslim preacher and outspoken supporter of President Bashar Assad in one of the most stunning assassinations of Syria's 2-year-old civil war. At least 41 others were killed and more than 84 wounded.

The slaying of Sheikh Mohammad Said Ramadan al-Buti removes one of the few remaining pillars of support for Assad among the majority Sunni sect that has risen up against him.

It also marks a new low in the Syrian civil war: While suicide bombings blamed on Islamic extremists fighting with the rebels have become common, Thursday's attack was the first time a suicide bomber detonated his explosives inside a mosque.

A prolific writer whose sermons were regularly broadcast on TV, the 84-year-old al-Buti was killed while giving a religious lesson to students at the Eman Mosque in the central Mazraa district of Damascus.

The most senior religious figure to be killed in Syria's civil war, his assassination was a major blow to Syria's embattled leader, who is fighting mainly Sunni rebels seeking his ouster. Al-Buti has been a vocal supporter of the regime since the early days of Assad's father and predecessor, the late President Hafez Assad, providing Sunni cover and legitimacy to their rule. Sunnis are the majority sect in Syria while Assad is from the minority Alawite sect — an offshoot of Shiite Islam.

"The blood of Sheik al-Buti will be a fire that ignites all the world," said Grand Mufti Ahmad Badreddine Hassoun, the country's top state-appointed Sunni Muslim cleric and an Assad loyalist.

Syrian TV showed footage of wounded people and bodies with severed limbs on the mosque's blood-stained floor, and later, corpses covered in white body bags lined up in rows. Sirens wailed through the capital as ambulances rushed to the scene of the explosion, which was sealed off by the military.

Among those killed was al-Buti's grandson, the TV said.

The bombing was among the most serious security breaches in the capital. An attack in July that targeted a high-level government crisis meeting killed four top regime officials, including Assad's brother-in-law and the defense minister.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for Thursday's attack.

Probe on alleged chemical attack set

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS – The United Nations will investigate the possible use of chemical weapons in Syria, which would amount to a crime against humanity, Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon announced Thursday.

The investigation could be broader than the Syrian government's request for an independent probe of a purported chemical weapons attack on Tuesday. Ban said he was aware of allegations of other, similar attacks and hoped the probe would ultimately help secure Syria's chemical weapons stockpile.

The secretary-general said investigators would look into Syria's allegation that rebels carried out a chemical weapons attack on Khan al-Assal village in northern Aleppo province. The rebels blamed regime forces for the attack.

A senior U.S. official, meanwhile, said Thursday that the United States now has strong indications that no chemical weapons were used at all in the attack. Officials won't entirely rule out the possibility, but this official said additional intelligence-gathering has led the U.S. to believe more strongly that it was not a weaponized chemical attack.

U.N. spokesman Martin Nesirky said France and Britain sent a letter to Ban Thursday asking for an investigation of three alleged chemical weapons attacks. He said Ban will review this suggestion as the U.N. develops the mandate for the investigation.

Costs of U.S. wars linger for more than 100 years

■ U.S. still paying kin of Civil War veterans

By Mike Baker
Associated Press

OLYMPIA, Wash. – If history is any judge, the U.S. government will be paying for the Iraq and Afghanistan wars for the next century as service members and their families grapple with the sacrifices of combat.

An Associated Press analysis of federal payment records found that the government is still making monthly payments to relatives of Civil War veterans — 148 years after the conflict ended.

At the 10-year anniversary of the start of the Iraq war, more than $40 billion a year is going to compensate veterans and survivors from the Spanish-American War from 1898, World Wars I and II, the Korean War, the Vietnam War, the two Iraq campaigns and the Afghanistan conflict. And those costs are rising rapidly.

U.S. Sen. Patty Murray said such expenses should remind the nation about war's long-lasting financial toll.

"When we decide to go to war, we have to consciously be also thinking about the cost," said Murray, D-Wash., adding that her WWII-veteran father's disability benefits helped feed their family.

With greater numbers of troops surviving combat injuries because of improvements in battlefield medicine and technology, the costs of disability payments are set to rise much higher.

The AP identified the disability and survivor benefits during an analysis of millions of federal payment records obtained under the Freedom of Information Act.

To gauge the post-war costs of each conflict, AP looked at four compensation programs that identify recipients by war: disabled veterans; survivors of those who died on active duty or from a service-related disability; low-income wartime vets over age 65 or disabled; and low-income survivors of wartime veterans or their disabled children.

■ The Iraq wars and Afghanistan: So far, the wars in Iraq, Afghanistan and the first Persian Gulf conflict in the early 1990s are costing about $12 billion a year to compensate those who have left military service or family members of those who have died.

Those post-service compensation costs have totaled more than $50 billion since 2003, not including expenses of medical care and other benefits provided to veterans, and are poised to grow for many years to come.

The new veterans are filing for disabilities at historic rates, with about 45 percent of those from Iraq and Afghanistan seeking compensation for injuries.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Juanita Tudor Lowrey, age 86, poses with a photo of her father, Civil War veteran Hugh Tudor on Tuesday in Kearney, Mo. Lowrey received pension benefits related to her father's service until she was 18 after her father died when she was 2 years old.

■ Vietnam War: It's been 40 years since the U.S. ended its involvement in the Vietnam War, and yet payments for the conflict are still rising.

Now above $22 billion annually, Vietnam compensation costs are roughly twice the size of the FBI's annual budget. And while many disabled Vietnam vets have been compensated for post-traumatic stress disorder, hearing loss or general wounds, other ailments are positioning the war to have large costs even after veterans die.

Based on an uncertain link to the defoliant Agent Orange that was used in Vietnam, federal officials approved diabetes a decade ago as an ailment that qualifies for cash compensation — and it is now the most compensated ailment for Vietnam vets.

■ World War I, World War II and the Korean War: World War I, which ended 94 years ago, continues to cost taxpayers about $20 million every year. World War II? $5 billion.

Compensation for WWII veterans and families didn't peak until 1991 — 46 years after the war ended — and annual costs since then have only declined by about 25 percent. Korean War costs appear to be leveling off at about $2.8 billion a year.

Of the 2,289 survivors drawing cash linked to WWI, about one-third are spouses and dozens of them are over 100 years in age.

Some of the other recipients are curious: Forty-seven of the spouses are under the age of 80, meaning they weren't born until years after the war ended. Many of those women were in their 20s and 30s when their aging spouses died in the 1960s and 1970s, and they've been drawing the monthly payments since.

■ Civil War and Spanish-American War: There are 10 living recipients of benefits tied to the 1898 Spanish-American War at a total cost of about $50,000 a year. The Civil War payments are going to two children of veterans — one in North Carolina and one in Tennessee— each for $876 a year.

Citing privacy, officials did not disclose the names of the two children getting the Civil War benefits.

Their ages suggest the one in Tennessee was born about 1920 and the North Carolina survivor was born around 1930. A veteran who was young during the Civil War would likely have been roughly 70 or 80 years old when the two people were born.

That's not unheard of. At age 86, Juanita Tudor Lowrey is the daughter of a Civil War veteran. Her father, Hugh Tudor, fought in the Union army. After his first wife died, Tudor was 73 when he remarried her 33-year-old mother in 1920. Lowrey was born in 1926.

Lowrey, who lives in Kearney, Mo., suspects the marriage might have been one of convenience, with her father looking for a housekeeper and her mother looking for some security. He died a couple years after she was born.

Lawmaker Duncan recalls arm-twisting, soul-searching before Iraq war vote

By Michael Collins
Scripps Howard News Service

WASHNGTON – In a secure, windowless room in the White House basement, Rep. John J. Duncan Jr., R-Tenn., listened carefully as top advisers to President George W. Bush pressed their case for war with Iraq.

Rep. John J. Duncan Jr.

Congress was close to authorizing the use of military action against Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein, but Duncan was not convinced war was justified or necessary. Fearing he might vote against going to war, Bush's aides had summoned the conservative Tennessee Republican and three other GOP House members to a briefing with National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, CIA Director George Tenet and Tenet's deputy director, John McLaughlin.

For the next hour, Bush's national security staffers tried to erase the lawmakers' doubts. Saddam has chemical or biological weapons, they said. As proof, they offered aerial surveillance photos of buildings and trucks hidden in the desert. Most Iraqis hate Saddam, they argued, and would love to see him deposed. War, they said, was needed to preserve national security.

But Duncan was not convinced. For him, one crucial question still had not been answered.

"Do you have any evidence of any imminent threat?" he recalls asking. "And they didn't."

A month after that Sept. 19, 2002, meeting, the House voted 296-133 to go to war. Early the next morning, the Senate approved the war resolution on a 77-23 vote. Only seven Republicans — six in the House, one in the Senate — voted against war.

A decade later, Duncan is the only one of those seven still in Congress. The others either lost races for re-election or retired.

For years, Duncan says, he suffered the fallout from his vote against the war. Constituents would stop him on the street and tell him he had made a mistake. A railroad lobbyist put out the word that Duncan would never chair a congressional committee. The pastor of a Baptist church where Duncan was supposed to deliver a Sunday lay sermon called him a few days before and, somewhat embarrassed, informed him that one of the deacons and top donors had threatened to leave the church if the congressman was allowed to speak. Duncan stayed home.

It would take years of war and bloodshed before public opinion would start to shift toward Duncan's point of view. But as the war dragged on, he said, people came around to his way of thinking.

"What had been a very unpopular vote slowly, slowly, slowly became, if not my most popular vote, certainly one of my most popular," he said.

Duncan had doubts about the need for war from the start. By the time he was called to the White House for the meeting with Rice, Tenet and McLaughlin, his reservations were widely known. Nothing he heard in that meeting changed his mind.

"I am not a pacifist by any stretch of the imagination," he said. "But I think you should never go to war unless there's no other reasonable alternative — and then only as a very last resort."

difficulties," said Sen. Bob Casey, D-Pa., whose efforts helped pass the law. Casey also said he believes the Obama administration will be ready to lead in states holding back.

Disparities already are cropping up. Town Meeting Day — the first Tuesday in March — is a storied tradition in Vermont, and this year it provided a platform to educate residents about their options under the health care law. As many as 250,000 may eventually get coverage through Vermont Health Connect, as the state's marketplace is known.

"Even before we were a state, these town meetings existed," said Sean Sheehan, director of education and outreach. "It's a way people come together as a community, and we are counting on those community connections to get the word out." The health care plan was on the agenda at about 100 town meetings, and other local gatherings are taking place.

Texas residents are entitled to the same benefits as Vermonters, but in the state with the highest proportion of its population uninsured, Gov. Rick Perry will not be promoting the federal insurance exchange, a spokeswoman said.

The result is a communications void that civic and political groups, mayors, insurers and hospitals will try to fill.

"You have people who aren't really charged up about it because they don't even know that they would qualify," said Durrel Douglas, spokesman for the Texas Organizing Project, an activist group. A national poll this week by the nonpartisan Kaiser Family Foundation found that two of every three uninsured people don't know enough about the law to understand how it will affect them.

Supporters of Obama's law in Texas say the federal government hasn't shown up yet to launch the state's insurance exchange and no one is sure when that will happen.

"It is a much bigger lift here," said Anne Dunkelberg, associate director of the Austin-based Center for Public Policy Priorities, which advocates for low-income people. "The sooner the federal exchange can get engaged and working with all the folks here who want to promote enrollment, the better."

The Congressional Budget Office predicts a slow start overall, with only 7 million gaining coverage through the exchanges next year, rising to 24 million in 2016.

At a recent insurance industry meeting, federal officials directing the rollout rattled off a dizzying list of deadlines. Public outreach will begin in earnest this summer and early fall, said Gary Cohen, head of the Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight.

The government sees three main groups of potential customers for the new insurance markets, he said.

There's the "active sick and worried," people who are uninsured or have pre-existing medical conditions. Under the law, insurers will no longer be able to turn the sick away.

There's the healthy and young. "They feel invincible, they don't feel a need for health insurance," said Cohen.

Finally, there's the passive and unengaged.

To keep premiums affordable, the government will need to sign up lots of people from the last two groups to balance those in poor health, who will have a strong motivation to join.

The official heading consumer outreach for the rollout, Julie Bataille, acknowledges the challenge but says she's confident.

"This is a really an enormous opportunity for us to change the conversation around health care and help individuals understand the benefits they can get," she said.

BUDGET

government shutdown.

The GOP budget proposal, similar to previous plans offered by Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan, R-Wis., demonstrates that it's possible, at least mathematically, to balance the budget within a decade without raising taxes. But to do so Ryan, his party's vice presidential nominee last year, assumes deep cuts that would force millions from programs for the poor like food stamps and Medicaid and cut almost 20 percent from domestic agency budget levels assumed less than two years ago.

Ryan's plan passed the House on a mostly party-line 221-207 vote, with 10 Republicans joining Democrats against it.

Meanwhile, the Democrat-controlled Senate debated for a second day its first budget since the 2009 plan that helped Obama pass his health care law. A vote on the Senate measure is expected late Friday or early Saturday.

The dueling House and Senate budget plans are anchored on opposite ends of the ideological spectrum in Washington, appealing to core partisans in warring GOP and Democratic tribes long gridlocked over how to attack budget deficits. The GOP plan caters to tea party forces while Senate Budget Committee Chairman Patty Murray, D-Wash., crafted a measure designed to nail down support from liberal senators like Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., and Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, who vehemently oppose cuts to safety net programs, like Medicare and Social Security.

What the Ryan and Murray budgets both fail to do is reach out to the political middle, where any possible bargain would have to be forged.

"At least we're moving closer to an opportunity for agreement," said Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill. "I know we're worlds apart when it comes to philosophy and how we go forward."

The sharp contrast over the 2014 budget and beyond came as the House cleared away last year's unfinished fiscal business — a sweeping, government-wide bill to keep Cabinet agencies running through the 2013 budget year, which ends Sept. 30.

The House passed the bipartisan 2013 measure by a sweeping 318-109 vote. The Senate had approved the measure on Wednesday.

The measure would authorize money for the day-to-day operations of every Cabinet agency through Sept. 30, provide another $87 billion to fund overseas military operations in Afghanistan and Iraq and maintain a pay freeze for federal workers. Automatic spending cuts of 5 percent to domestic programs and 8 percent to the Pentagon are left in place, leaving hundreds of thousands of federal workers facing job furloughs.

But the bill eases the effect of the trims on food inspections and college assistance for active duty military and relieves the Pentagon from a cash crunch in accounts for training and readiness. Veteran health programs will get their scheduled increases and there are big boosts to modernize the Pentagon's nuclear arsenal. It also ensures full funding for a food program for pregnant women and their babies.

Federal agencies have thus far borne the brunt of the spending cuts hammered out in a hard-fought 2011 budget pact that set spending "caps" and increased the government's borrowing limit. Congress' failure to follow up with another deficit bargain set the automatic spending cuts in motion. They are just beginning to bite, and Republicans insist they remain in place until Democrats agree to cuts to rapidly growing entitlement programs, which are funded automatically as the "mandatory" portion of the budget.

But Democrats were denied additional money to implement Obama's signature first-term accomplishments on overhauling the health care system and tightening regulation of Wall Street.

The long-term, nonbinding GOP budget plan authored by Ryan, the party's failed 2012 vice presidential nominee, makes lots of promises about "reforming" costly benefits programs like food stamps, Medicare and Medicaid, but it's often scant on details about the cuts. And while pledging a tax reform plan that would lower the top income tax bracket from 39.6 percent to 25 percent, it doesn't say which tax breaks, deductions and credits it would eliminate to replace almost $6 trillion in lost revenue over a decade.

The Ryan measure also revives a controversial plan to turn the Medicare programs for the elderly into a voucher-like system for future beneficiaries born in 1959 or later. Critics say the idea would mean ever-spiraling out-of-pocket costs for care, but Ryan insists the plan would inject competition into a broken system.

"This is an uncompromising, ideological approach to our budget issues," said the Budget Committee's top Democrat, Chris Van Hollen of Maryland. "The American people voted, and they resoundingly rejected the approach that is now taken, once again, for the third year in a row, in this Republican budget."

Fresh from passing the 2013 wrap-up measure, the Senate was turning to Murray's plan, which would add nearly $1 trillion in new taxes over the coming decade in an attempt to stabilize the $16 trillion-plus national debt.

But Murray's plan would actually increase government spending — measured against a "baseline" that already assumes automatic budget increases — after accounting for the $1.2 trillion cost of repealing the automatic cuts. That means the net cuts to the deficit would amount to just a few hundred billion dollars in a federal budget estimated at $46 trillion or so over the coming decade. Murray's position is that the automatic cuts were designed to prod Washington into action on the debt and were never intended to take effect. By that math her budget promises $1.85 trillion in lower deficits after 10 years.

EDUCATION

school," he said. "They will probably graduate and they are more likely to go onto post-secondary. Kids who start kindergarten significantly behind frequently never catch up."

The Kentucky Department of Education and the Governor's Office of Early Childhood released data last week from a pilot program that was used to measure how prepared kindergartners are to start school across the state.

At the beginning of the 2012-13 school year, teachers administered the Brigance kindergarten screen to 31,480 kindergarten schools in 109 Kentucky school districts.

Neither Henderson or Union County Schools participated, but Dixon Elementary School in Webster County had its kindergartners screened. Students across the state were measured on their cognitive/general knowledge; language and communications; physical well-being; social-emotional development; and self-help skills.

The social-emotional skills for Dixon kindergartners is 16.7 percent below average, 56.3 percent average and 27.1 above average. The self-help skills for the same kindergartners is 18.8 percent below average, 58.3 average and 22.9 above average.

Only 28 percent of Kentucky's incoming kindergarten students in the pilot were ready to succeed without additional supports.

"It's a pilot year," said Terry Tolan, executive director for the Governor's Office of Early Childhood. "I don't know if we can make any conclusion except that not nearly enough of our kids are arriving at kindergarten ready to be successful."

Though not every district participated in the kindergarten screenings, the state has compiled early childhood education data for each county. It's available to view at http://kidsnow.ky.gov under the school readiness tab.

Hulefeld said the state wants the community to understand the data and have everyone work together so students are prepared to succeed.

"It's not right that 3, 4, 5-year-olds, through no fault of their own, are behind," he said. "Nobody can hold the little children accountable for not being ready for kindergarten."

EGG HUNTS
from 1A

Easter egg hunt, according to a news release.

There are more than 10,000 eggs to find.

The free activity begins at 10 a.m. Children should be present 10 minutes before starting time.

Parks and Recreation staff will be located in the large open-air shelter to provide help. Signs will be posted for directions.

The activity will be canceled in case of rain. For more information, call the Parks and Recreation Department at 831-1274.

■ Audubon State Park also is planning an Easter event this Saturday.

"Eggstravaganza" is for ages 3 to 7 and will include art activities, storytelling by professional storyteller Linda Bruns and live bunnies.

It will take place from 10 a.m. to noon in the museum, and preregistration is required. The cost is $7.

For more information or to register, contact Kim McGrew-Liggett at 827-1893 or email her at kim.mcgraw@ky.gov.

■ Calvary Pentecostal Church in Sebree will sponsor a community Easter egg hunt this Saturday featuring 20,000 plastic eggs, toys and prizes.

The hunt will begin at 11 a.m. at Sebree Elementary School.

It is open to the public for all children who are old enough to walk through age 12.

Before the hunt, the church's youth will present a short drama in the school gym about the real meaning of Easter, according to organizer Pam Berry, whose husband, Eddie, is pastor at Calvary.

Prizes will be awarded in each age group, which are walking through 2 years old, 3 to 5 years old, 6 to 8 years and 9 to 12 years.

The event is free and open to anyone who wants to participate.

For more information, call Berry at 270-844-3908.

Other egg hunts planned locally:

■ First Assembly of God: 3 p.m. this Saturday, 2208 U.S. 60-East. Activities will include an egg hunt, inflatables and face painting. The public is invited.

■ Henderson Nursing and Rehab: 1:30 p.m. March 24, 2500 N. Elm St. Activities include photos with the Easter Bunny, light refreshments, cake walk, face painting and egg hunting by divisions.

■ Community Baptist Church: 1 p.m. Sunday, 1026 Pebble Creek Drive. Activities include snacks, games, face painting, bounce house and egg hunt. The public is welcome.

Top overall seed Louisville thumps N.C. A&T 79-48 in NCAA tourney

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

JOHN BAZEMORE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina A&T forward Adrian Powell (1) has his shot blocked by Louisville forward Stephan Van Treese (44) during the first half of their second-round game in the NCAA tournament on Thursday at Rupp Arena in Lexington.

LEXINGTON – North Carolina A&T coach Cy Alexander knows who he's pulling for the rest of the NCAA tournament.

If Louisville wins it all, at least his Aggies can say they got beat by the best.

North Carolina A&T's reward for winning its first NCAA tournament game was a 79-48 rout by top-seeded Louisville on Thursday night that wasn't even as close as the score made it look. Bruce Beckford was the only Aggies player in double figures (12 points) as Louisville limited A&T to 42 percent shooting and forced 27 turnovers. The Cardinals set an NCAA tournament mark with 20 steals, including a Louisville tournament-record eight by Russ Smith.

Smith also had 23 points on 10-of-16 shooting, while Peyton Siva had eight assists, four steals and six points for coach Rick Pitino's powerhouse.

"I told Rick that I'm pulling for him to win the national championship," Alexander said. "He's got a Final Four-quality team. They made shots and they're as good as anybody in the country when they're going."

No 16th seed has ever beaten a No. 1 and, unlike that Southern-Gonzaga squeaker that ended shortly before the Aggies and Cardinals tipped off, this one was never even a contest.

Oh, the Big East champs let A&T (20-17) hang around for a few minutes, giving the small handful of Aggies fans enough time to take photos of the scoreboard while the margin was still respectable. (OK, it was 6-4. Considering the Aggies had never even won an NCAA tournament game until Tuesday night, it was as good as a lead.)

Once Louisville (30-5) stepped on the gas, however, this one was done.

"This is going to sound crazy ... I hate the first-round game when you're a 1 seed," Pitino said. "Normally your guys get a little tight, saying, 'We're 1 seed, uh-oh, we could lose this game,' and you start playing not to lose rather than to win. I felt very good about this game because the opponent we were playing is a trapping, running team. So I felt good about the matchup.

"North Carolina A&T is a well-coached team and well-drilled team," he added. "They ran into a similar style tonight that was bigger, more talented."

Louisville shot better than 57 percent, and the only players who didn't score were the benchwarmers who came in at the end of the game. The Cardinals scored on oh, so sweet finger rolls and rim-rattling dunks. They scored on layups and knocked down short jumpers. They hit from 3-point range and converted three-point plays.

And where to even begin with those guards.

Siva and Smith are arguably the best tandem in the country and, if they continue playing this way, Louisville will have a good shot at improving on last year's trip to the Final Four.

With the game already out of hand, Siva and Smith combined for a 13-0 run that put Louisville up 67-37. Smith scored the first two baskets, Siva answered with two of his own and then Smith drilled a 3 from the corner. They finished it off with Siva scooping up a loose ball at halfcourt and dishing to Smith.

In the first half, they may as well have been playing keep-away for as much as they let the Aggies have the ball.

Gorgui Dieng blocked a jumper by Beckford, and Louisville got the rebound. Luke Hancock made a 3 at the other end, and North Carolina A&T didn't even have time to set its offense before the Cardinals harassed Jeremy Underwood into a turnover. After a quick layup by Smith, the Aggies had the ball for just a couple of seconds before Siva snatched it away from Jean Louisme. Underwood quickly fouled Montrezl Harrell, who made the second of two shots.

Siva let the Aggies get near halfcourt before pouncing again for another steal. Smith missed the layup, and the Aggies managed to hold onto the ball long enough to not only take a shot, but get a 3-pointer from Adrian Powell.

Had Pitino let his guards play longer — he pulled them with about seven minutes left — the score would have been even more lopsided.

"I was told by several coaches that had played against Louisville (about) the strength and quickness of the guards, their quick hands," Alexander said. "It's hard to simulate that in 24 hours, in a hotel ballroom."

Now, Louisville might make plenty of other teams look silly before the tournament is over. But the Aggies didn't help themselves much, either. They were whistled for 10-second and shot-clock violations, and had to call a timeout because they were being smothered by Cardinals. They threw the ball away and took shots that had no prayer of going in.

And that was just in the first 10 minutes of the game. By the second half, the A&T pep band broke into a rousing rendition of Tupac's "Keep Ya Head Up."

OWENSBORO – University of Louisville signee Mason Richardson limited Henderson County to three hits and pitched Owensboro Catholic to a 3-2 win over the Colonels on Thursday.

Henderson County pitcher Marty Coursey held the Aces (3-0) to just one hit over five innings of work.

"Marty threw well enough to win, but we made four errors behind him," Henderson County coach Nathan Isenberg said.

Coursey struck out six and walked two. Clay Church allowed one hit in his one inning of relief and struck out two. Only one of Owensboro Catholic's runs was earned.

Kaleb Duckworth had two of the Colonels' three hits. Sam Higgs had the team's only RBI.

Henderson County (2-2) will play two games Saturday at Bowling Green, facing the host Purples at 11 a.m. and Russell County at 1:30 p.m.

DIXON – Henderson County struck for seven runs in the first inning and Maci Brown pitched a two-hitter as the Lady Colonels beat Webster County 13-0 on Thursday.

Henderson County (2-0) sent 10 batters to the plate in the first inning and Carson Glick hit a two-run homer, the first of her career, to help her team quickly get out in front.

Brown, who struck out eight without issuing a walk, carried a no-hitter into the fourth inning when Bailey Townsend singled to right field.

"It was a masterful job by Maci Brown using a rise ball, screwball and change-up," Henderson County coach Rick Green said.

The Lady Colonels scored four more runs in the second as nine hitters came to the plate to increase the lead to 11-0.

Brooklyn Williams, Blake Williams, Jaime Raleigh and Glick had two hits apiece. Courtney Turner, Blake Williams and Glick had two RBIs apiece.

The junior varsity game was canceled because of the cold temperatures.

Henderson County will host Evansville Mater Dei today beginning with the varsity game at 5:30 p.m.

Toppers face tall task in top seed KU

WKU, no stranger to the NCAA, will try to pull huge upset tonight

By Dave Skretta
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – The first step off the bus was familiar. So was going through security, navigating the maze of tunnels, walking into the locker room and getting cozy in one of the wooden stalls.

Yes, everything about the Sprint Center is familiar to top-seeded Kansas.

After all, the Jayhawks are 6-0 in the building this season.

"It's kind of weird," admitted freshman star Ben McLemore, "but you know, we've worked hard to come back here, and now we just have to go out there and perform."

The Jayhawks (29-5) earned the top seed in the South Region and the right to play a 30-minute drive from their Lawrence campus by winning the regular-season Big 12 title, and running roughshod through the conference tournament last weekend at Kansas City's downtown arena.

Along with those three wins, the Jayhawks have beaten Washington State, Saint Louis and Oregon State in the Sprint Center, giving it a distinctive home-away-from-from home feeling.

They'll try to keep their success going against No. 16 seed Western Kentucky (20-15) when they meet Friday night in one of the last games of the second round of the NCAA tournament.

"It feels like the Big 12 tournament, to be honest," Jayhawks center Jeff Withey said. "I think being so close to home will be a great advantage for us. We're far enough away that we don't have the distractions, but close enough that we'll still have the support of our fans."

Even the most pint-sized fans.

"There isn't a whole lot that can distract us," senior guard Travis Releford said, "other than little kids running up to us, asking for autographs. And that I look like as fun, part of Kansas basketball and being part of this tournament."

As easily recognized as the Jayhawks are around town, the Hilltoppers are complete unknowns, so much so that Western Kentucky coach Ray Harper had a tough time getting through security.

Western Kentucky guard T.J. Price (52) shoots during practice for the NCAA tournament in Kansas City on Thursday. The Hilltoppers face Kansas in a second-round game tonight.

He was held up for several minutes by overzealous Sprint Center staff. Officials from Western Kentucky eventually managed to convince the guards that, yes indeed, Harper was the coach.

"Hopefully they'll let me in tomorrow night," he said with a wry smile.

The Hilltoppers are no stranger to the NCAA tournament, of course, even if they are to Kansas City. They're participating for the fourth time in the last six seasons after winning four games in four days to capture the Sun Belt tournament title.

They've also won at least once in each of their last three NCAA tournament appearances, rallying from 16 points down with 4:51 left to beat Mississippi Valley State in a "First Four" game last year, and then hanging tough with eventual champion Kentucky in an 81-66 defeat.

"We were in that game for a little bit," recalled the Hilltoppers' T.J. Price. "I'm feeling like we come into this game knowing we can beat Kansas, not just compete with them, or be happy we're in the NCAA tournament."

Kansas is in the tournament for the 24th consecutive year, second only to North Carolina for the longest streak, and is a No. 1 seed for the fifth time in the past seven tournaments.

The Jayhawks are also chasing a bit of history against Western Kentucky.

They can win their 30th game for the fourth straight season — something no other Division I school has done after Memphis was forced to vacate the entire 2008 season. The Jayhawks can also win their 2,100th game, second only to Kentucky (2,111) for most all-time.

Maryland rallies for NIT victory

COLLEGE PARK, Md. – Dez Wells scored 19 points and Maryland rallied in the final nine minutes to beat Denver 62-52 Thursday night in the second round of the NIT.

The Terrapins (24-12) closed the game with a 21-4 run after trailing 48-39 with 9:15 left. Wells fueled the surge with nine points.

Maryland will next play the winner of the Alabama-Stanford game to be played Saturday.

Chris Udolfia scored 24 for the Pioneers (22-10), including 19 during a first half that featured three ties and 12 lead changes.

Although Udolfia picked up his third foul soon after halftime, Denver's Brett Olsen made a three-point play and a 3-pointer within a minute to put the Pioneers up by nine.

Rose is still not sure about return

DEERFIELD, Ill. – Chicago Bulls superstar Derrick Rose still isn't sure when he'll come back from his knee injury.

The former MVP point guard sounded like a player who just might miss the entire season, though he said he hasn't experienced any setbacks in his recovery. He said Thursday that he's still experiencing some soreness in his surgically repaired left knee and hasn't set a target date for his return.

"It could be tomorrow and I feel like I can play the next game," Rose said as the Bulls practiced before Thursday night's game against Portland. "Nobody knows but God."

Titans acquire Bernard Pollard

NASHVILLE, Tenn. – The Tennessee Titans have agreed to a one-year contract with safety Bernard Pollard, the second safety the team has added in free agency this offseason.

The Titans announced the deal Thursday.

A seven-year veteran, Pollard spent the past two seasons with Baltimore. The 6-foot-1 Pollard also has played with Kansas City and Houston starting 85 of his 105 career games with nine interceptions, nine sacks, 10 forced fumbles and seven recovered fumbles.

General manager Ruston Webster says Pollard is a physical and experienced safety who was a key player as the Ravens won the Super Bowl.

Battery and stalk charges for Capriati

NORTH PALM BEACH, Fla. – Former tennis star Jennifer Capriati has been charged after police said she punched her ex-boyfriend on Valentine's Day while he was working out at a gym.

Palm Beach County court records show Capriati was charged by prosecutors Wednesday. She has been issued a summons to appear before a judge April 17 on stalking and battery charges, though she has not been arrested. No attorney for Capriati was listed.

North Palm Beach police say Ivan Brannan was working out when the 36-year-old Capriati approached him and yelled at him.

Monument for Wheldon unveiled

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. – The city of St. Petersburg honored Dan Wheldon on Thursday with a monument to the late driver on the street circuit of his adopted hometown.

The monument at Turn 10 includes bricks from Indianapolis Motor Speedway, stones from his native England and the handprints of his wife and two sons. It's located near the sign marking "Dan Wheldon Way" that was dedicated last year.

The two-time Indianapolis 500 winner was killed in the 2011 season finale at Las Vegas.

Zags pull off a great escape

■ Wichita St. shocks Pitt; Marquette avoids upset

Wire reports

GEORGE FREY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

A March Madness warm-up turned into a great escape for Gonzaga.

The Zags got pushed to the limit by Southern, pulling out a 64-58 victory in the closing minutes to avoid becoming the first No. 1 seed to lose to a 16 in the NCAA tournament.

Kelly Olynyk led the Zags (32-2) with 21 points. They play No. 9 Wichita State on Saturday.

But it was a pair of 3-pointers — one by Gary Bell Jr., the next by Kevin Pangos — that staked the Bulldogs to a 62-58 lead only moments after the game was tied at 56 with 3:45 left.

Derick Beltran had 21 points to lead Southern (23-10) and his 14-foot baseline jumper tied it at 56. But the Jaguars from the Southwestern Athletic Conference didn't make another field goal.

No. 1 seeds are now 113-0 against 16s.

■ Wichita State 73, Pittsburgh 55: Malcolm Armstead scored 22 points, Cleanthony Early added 21 and ninth-seeded Wichita State ousted Pittsburgh.

Freshman Steven Adams led Pitt (24-9) with 13 points and 11 rebounds.

Call Hall added 11 points for the Shockers (27-8).

The Shockers forced Pitt into 15 turnovers and held the Panthers to 35 percent shooting, including 1 of 17 from 3-point range.

Pitt's leading scorer, Tray Woodall, missed his first four shots and finished with two points. He shot 1 of 12, including 0 of 5 from beyond the arc, with five turnovers.

■ Marquette 59, Davidson 58: Vander Blue's layup with one second left capped Marquette's rally from a nine-point deficit and gave the third-seeded Golden Eagles a 59-58 victory over Davidson Thursday in the NCAA tournament.

Blue and Jamil Wilson made consecutive 3-pointers to bring Marquette within 58-57 with 11 seconds left. The Golden Eagles then caught a huge break when De'Mon Brooks' long inbounds pass went out of bounds at midcourt with 5.5 seconds left, providing another opportunity.

Blue took full advantage after getting Wilson's inbounds pass, driving left and finding room for the winning basket. He then sealed Marquette's improbable win by stealing Davidson's last-ditch inbounds pass at midcourt to set off a celebration among players and Golden Eagles fans at Rupp Arena.

Blue scored seven of Marquette's final 11 points to finish with 16. Wilson added 14 points as the Golden Eagles (24-8) won for the fifth time in six games and advanced to face Butler in Saturday's third round of the East Regional.

Jake Cohen's 20 points led Davidson (26-8), who seemed in control leading 49-40 with 6½ minutes left.

■ Butler 68, Bucknell 56: Andrew Smith had a double-double including a career-high 16 rebounds, Roosevelt Jones added 14 points and Butler made its free throws down the stretch to hold off upset-minded Bucknell.

After trailing for most of the game, 11th-seeded Bucknell got back into it with a 19-2 second-half run. But after Joe Willman's jumper cut Butler's lead to 43-42 with 6:56 left, the Bison (28-6) went almost five minutes without scoring. Butler went 18-of-20 at the line in the last 4:43.

Willman scored a career-high 20 points for Bucknell, but the Bison couldn't overcome an off day by two-time Patriot League Player of the Year Mike Muscala. Bucknell's all-time leading scorer had nine points, only the second time this season he'd failed to reach double figures.

■ Michigan State 65, Valparaiso 54: Derrick Nix had 23 points and a career-high 15 rebounds to help power third-seeded Michigan State past the 14th-seeded Crusaders in the Midwest Regional.

The Spartans went on a 26-5 run in the first half to take control, and cruised to an easy victory.

Michigan State (26-8) will play Memphis on Saturday when coach Tom Izzo's Spartans will be shooting for a spot in the round of 16 for the fifth time in six years.

■ Memphis 54, St. Mary's 52: Matthew Dellavedova's 3-pointer from the right wing missed everything as time expired, allowing sixth-seeded Memphis to hold on for a win over 11th-seeded Saint Mary's.

The Tigers (31-4) led by 15 in the first half but nearly gave the game away in the final seconds.

With Memphis ahead 54-49, Eividas Petrulis banked in a 3-pointer with 3.1 seconds to play. The Tigers then lost the ball when the Gaels' Jordan Giusti deflected the inbound pass off Joe Jackson of Memphis and out of bounds.

■ Saint Louis 64, New Mexico State 44: Dwayne Evans scored 24 points, Cody Ellis added 12 points and fourth-seeded Saint Louis overwhelmed New Mexico State in the Midwest Regional.

Playing through the death of Rick Majerus in December, Saint Louis reached another mark for its late coach. The Billikens (28-6) eclipsed the 1988-89 team's school record of 27 victories.

Evans shot 11 of 16 and finished a point shy of his career best to propel Saint Louis past 7-foot-5 New Mexico State freshman Sim Bhullar. The Billikens held Bhullar to four points, 11 rebounds and three blocks.

■ Oregon 68, Oklahoma State 55: Damyean Dotson scored 17 points and Arsalan Kazemi added 11 points and 17 rebounds to help 12th-seeded Oregon extend a run that began in the Pac-12 tournament by beating fifth-seeded Oklahoma.

Dominic Artis scored 13 points and helped frustrate Oklahoma State star freshman Marcus Smart on the defensive end to give the Ducks (27-8) their first tournament win in six years.

■ California 64, UNLV 61: Allen Crabbe had 19 points and nine rebounds, reserve Robert Thurman scored all 12 of his points on dunks and 12th-seeded California held off UNLV.

Buoyed by the crowd support of a strong contingent so close to Berkeley, the Golden Bears (21-11) held the Runnin' Rebels (25-10) without a basket for more than 11 minutes in the second half.

■ Arizona 81, Belmont 64: Mark Lyons scored 23 points and sixth-seeded Arizona rolled past Belmont.

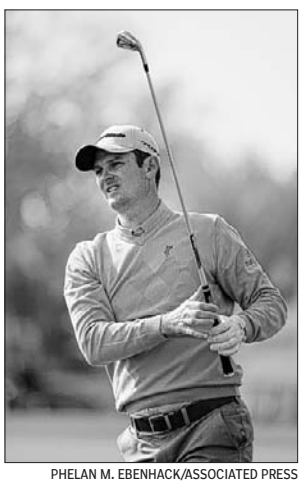

The Wildcats (26-7) used their huge size advantage to shut down the Bruins (26-7), who are 0-6 in tourney games. Arizona held a 44-18 edge on the boards, outscored Belmont 36-18 in the paint, blocked five shots and outshot the Bruins from 3-point range.

■ Michigan 71, South Dakota State 56: Glenn Robinson III scored 21 points and Mitch McGary added 13 points and nine rebounds, helping fourth-seeded Michigan overcome a rough night for star Trey Burke.

Burke made only two field goals and left the game briefly in the second half after a hard fall under the basket. The star point guard came back after that, but he finished with only six points.

Rose takes the lead with 65 at Bay Hill; Woods is 4 back

Wire reports

PHELAN M. EBENHACK/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Justin Rose watches his shot from the 18th fairway during the first round of the Arnold Palmer Invitational in Orlando, Fla., on Thursday.

Justin Rose started out as another guy in Tiger Woods' group Thursday at Bay Hill. He wound up in the lead.

Rose put on a clinic with the putter and ran off four straight birdies late in his round for a 7-under 65, giving him a two-shot lead after the opening round of the Arnold Palmer Invitational.

Woods had two sloppy bogeys from greenside bunkers and didn't hit it as well as he did when he won Doral two weeks ago. But he made enough key par saves and manhandled the par 5s to scratch out a 69, a reasonable start as he tries to win Bay Hill for the eighth time and return to No. 1 in the world.

It was only the sixth time in 31 rounds at Bay Hill that Rose broke 70.

"If you had said I would shoot a 65 on the range this morning, I would have probably said, 'How many holes have I played?' And that didn't change much," Rose said. "The first five, six holes out there were a grind."

John Huh had a chance to catch him late in the afternoon, but needing a birdie on the final hole, he found a fairway bunker on No. 9 and took bogey for a 67. John Rollins and Brad Fritsch were at 68.

Rose and Woods played in the morning, the tougher side of the draw because of chilly temperatures and a strong breeze. The rough was thick without being terribly high. The hole locations were in spots Woods had not seen very often. The scores were reflective of a challenging morning until Rose and Woods began to pick up the pace on the par-5 16th.

Both made eagle from inside 15 feet — Woods hit a 9-iron for a second shot on a hole that was playing downwind — but that's where their fortunes changed. Woods came up short in a bunker, hit a poor shot and took bogey on the 17th. Rose holed a 20-foot birdie putt.

On the front nine, both made three straight birdies starting on the par-5 fourth. Rose doubled his lead over Woods on the par-3 seventh with a 12-foot birdie putt, and Woods came up short in the bunker and failed to save par.

Also in the group at 69 with Woods were Ryo Ishikawa of Japan, Nick Watney, Sean O'Hair and Bill Haas, who bogeyed his last two holes.

■ LPGA Tour: Jane Park shot a bogey-free 6-under 66 to take a one-stroke lead over Caroline Hedwall and Karrie Webb after the first round of the Kia Classic.

■ Malaysian Open: Thailand's Kiradech Aphibarnrat shot a 7-under 65 to take the lead in the Malaysian Open lead before thunderstorms forced the suspension of the first round.

Even huge deficits fail to derail the streaking Heat

By Tim Reynolds
Associated Press

MIAMI – For the Miami Heat, it has been anything but an ordinary path along the way to this extraordinary 24-game winning streak.

There have been blowouts, buzzer-beaters and now a pair of huge second-half rallies. Or, as Dwyane Wade would call it all ...

"Fun," the Heat guard said.

These days, everything — even huge deficits — seems like fun for the reigning NBA champions, who haven't lost a game in nearly two months. And this week has brought perhaps the two most scintillating additions to the league's second-longest winning streak ever, now nine shy of matching the Los Angeles Lakers of 1971-72 for the top spot on that list.

They were down by 17 in Boston on Monday, then trailed by 27 in Cleveland on Wednesday. Somehow, someway, the streak lived on both times, and Miami now has a chance at consecutive win No. 25 on Friday night when they play host to the Detroit Pistons — a team that has lost nine in a row.

"Faith," said Heat forward Shane Battier, whose 3-pointers helped spark the comeback in Cleveland. "We have a lot of faith in each other, a lot of faith of what we can do. When we give the effort and the concentration, we can do some pretty amazing things. We don't want to keep proving that. We'll take a more consistent effort versus turning the jets on when we have to, but I'm proud of the resolve of this team."

Apparently, so are those 1971-72 Lakers. At least, some of them are.

Heat President Pat Riley played for that 33-in-a-row club, so it's a safe bet that he's thrilled to see history possibly repeating itself with him being part of it again. And on Thursday, NBA legend Jerry West — another part of that Lakers team — made clear that he's enjoying watching this Heat run as well.

"It may not end," West said. "That's why I think it's so remarkable."

So dizzying was the comeback that, when it was over, Wade wasn't sure about the streak's length.

"What are we at, 24 games?" Wade asked. "You start losing count."

NFL owners take some insanity out of the game

No one has ever so much as estimated the length or breadth or depth of the convulsive transition under way in the NFL, so maybe it's not surprising that some of the people it will affect are having such profound difficulty with it.

No one said it would be easy changing the game from 60 minutes of essentially unrepressed violence into something the players can live with, and I mean literally.

There's an unnecessarily deep-grained brutality to football at this level that's leaving people unable to function mentally as well as physically, and they're taking collateral damage.

This didn't happen overnight. It won't recede overnight.

By taking the rightful step that penalizes "forcible contact by delivering a blow with the top crown of the helmet against an opponent when both players are clearly outside of the tackle box," the league's owners Wednesday accelerated the transition back toward sanity.

From now on, a running back cannot lower his head to ram a tackler in the open field, and a defender cannot do the same to a ball carrier, at least without drawing a penalty.

The league shouldn't do this unilaterally, but the transition will be markedly smoother when players graduate from a mentality that's been wired into their DNA by coaches and executives and other players for decades.

In the opening pages of "The Blind Side," a book about Baltimore Ravens tackle Michael Oher and, more broadly, about the game's evolution, author Michael Lewis effectively illuminates the absolutely fearsome nature of the anatomical politics between the sidelines.

"A sack is when you run up behind somebody who's not watching, he can't see you, and you really put your helmet into him," is the quote he presents from the New York Giants' Lawrence Taylor. "I don't like to just wrap the quarterback. So long as the guy is holding the ball, I intend to hurt him."

These quotes are going on 30 years old. Don't tell me the game is more civilized today. The L.T. mentality has metastasized. Taylor wasn't reviled for his attitude. He was revered. The next generation of defenders couldn't wait to play that way. Eventually, meaning today, there are too many players who are as obsessed with hurting people as they are with winning.

Way too often, coaches love them for it.

There are all manner of current and former running backs staging all manner of conniptions over the new rule, predictable enough. That's the thing about transition. It's hard.

"It's totally against what people are teaching players," Dallas Cowboys Hall of Famer Emmitt Smith told Bleacher Report. "At the end of the day, my head is gonna be the first thing to make contact. That's the part that I think is totally missing."

But the fact is, for too many guys, a couple of years after they're done playing, their mind is totally missing as well. So coach it differently. It's not that drastic of an adjustment.

"One of few times when you heard people clap," Tennessee Titans coach Jeff Fisher was saying on the NFL Network about the 31-1 vote for this rule change among owners. "It's a huge victory for the NFL."

IU to play as presidential pick

■ Hoosiers carry even heavier weight entering NCAA tourney

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

DAYTON, Ohio – It's tough enough living up to the lofty expectations of those die-hard Hoosiers fans, born and bred to bleed crimson and cream.

This March, Indiana carries an even heavier weight.

The White House is watching.

President Obama, the nation's basketballer-in-chief, has picked the Hoosiers to be NCAA champions.

"It's nice," Indiana coach Tom Crean said of the presidential seal of approval. "It's really good. But I'm also concerned that someone said that he was 1-3 in his picks before. You hope he's right on this one."

Strapped with a No. 1 ranking almost since the season tipped off in November, the Hoosiers (27-6) will be overwhelming favorites on Friday when they meet No. 16 seed James Madison in the first round of the East Regional. It's essentially a warm-up game for the the Big Ten's regular-season champions, but Crean knows his players won't overlook the fearless Dukes (21-14), who beat LIU Brooklyn on Wednesday night in the First Four.

"The Big Ten prepares you for anything and everything," Crean said, "and the one thing it totally prepares you for is to never take anything lightly."

Crean knows something about overcoming long odds. It's been an uphill climb, but he has Indiana looking like the Indiana of old.

Five years ago, he inherited a program that had bottomed out, leveled by NCAA sanctions and disgraced by scandal under former coach Kelvin Sampson. Crean won just six games in his first season, 10 and 12 the next two. Last year, the Hoosiers returned to the NCAA field for the first time since 2007 and won two games before losing to eventual champ Kentucky.

The mission in 2013 is simple: Hang a title banner inside Assembly Hall next to the ones from 1940, 1953, 1976, 1981 and 1987.

"We've been through a lot and expect nothing but the best," said junior guard Victor Oladipo, the Hoosiers' best all-around player. "We're going into this tournament to try and win it. Our main goal is to win the tournament, just play together and fun and play Indiana basketball."

This year, playing "Indiana Basketball," the Hoosiers emerged from the other side of the Big Ten's meat-and-bone-grinding schedule with their first outright league title since 1993. Indiana may be the most balanced team in the country, one capable of playing any style. Want to run? The Hoosiers can get out and go. Slow it down? They can grind. A 3-point shootout? Fire first.

AL BEHRHMAN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Indiana forward Cody Zeller dunks during practice at the NCAA tournament on Thursday in Dayton, Ohio. Indiana plays James Madison today in the second round.

Indiana is second in the nation in free throws per game (18.9) and third in scoring, scoring margin and 3-point percentage.

The Hoosiers have no apparent weaknesses, but that won't stop the Dukes, who notched their first NCAA tourney win since 1983 earlier this week, from looking for some flaws. James Madison's players feel they have nothing to lose and intend to make the most of their chance to become the first No. 16 to take out a No. 1 seed.

"The pressure ain't on us," said senior forward Rayshawn Goins, the team's leading scorer who sat out the first half of the LIU Brooklyn game because of a suspension. "They're the No. 1 team in the country. We're just going to go out and play our best basketball."

Even then, that might not be enough to take down the Hoosiers, who have the luxury of pounding the ball inside to 7-foot center Cody Zeller if their outside shots aren't falling — and that's not often.

James Madison has dealt with adversity all season. They were blown out by 30 points at UCLA in their season opener and started the year 1-5. By winning the Colonial Athletic Association title last week, they earned their first trip to the NCAAs in 19 years but the celebration was muted when Goins was arrested in Harrisonburg, Va. Police said they were called to break up a party and Goins shouted obscenities at them.

While he was on the bench for the first half Wednesday night, his replacement, A.J. Davis, made a 3-pointer to open the game and scored 20 points in James Madison's 68-55 win.

Davis said coach Matt Brady has been reminding his players to "stay within our character" and not try to do more than they're capable.

The Dukes won't surprise the Hoosiers, who were able to watch them play in the opening round. Indiana has done its scouting, and Oladipo has done some extra studying of the school in Harrisonburg, Va.

During Indiana's news conference, a reporter quizzed Oladipo on James Madison trivia — everything from the school's location to its mascot.

"They're in the CAA," Oladipo said confidently. "I think they're the Dukes. They're from Virginia, and I'm from there, so I know a little somethin'-somethin' about James Madison."

Henderson both colorful, polarizing

■ Ole Miss star the guy opposing fans love to hate

By Dave Skretta
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Ole Miss coach Andy Kennedy compares watching Marshall Henderson to watching NASCAR.

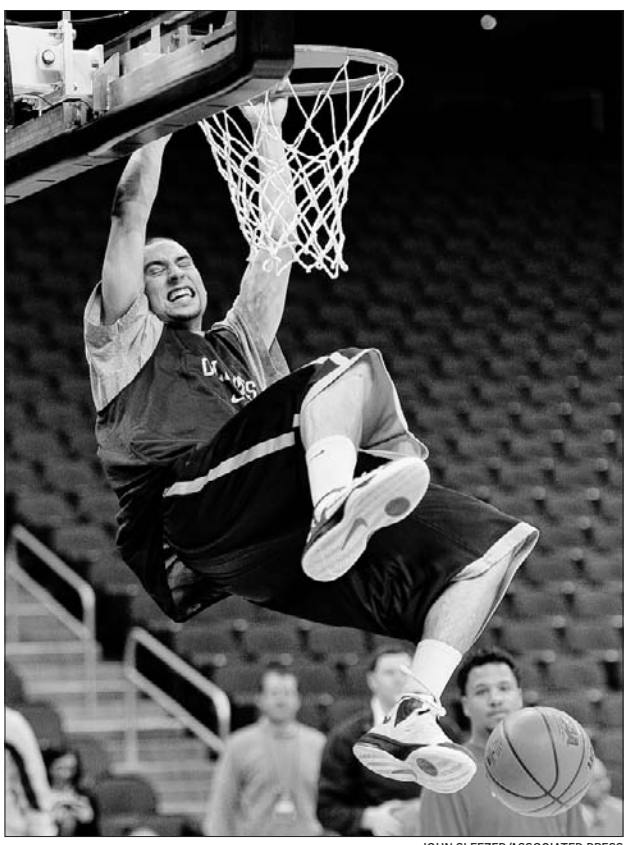

The wrecks are both unpredictable and inevitable.

The Rebels' colorful, polarizing guard led the SEC in scoring this season, helping them win the SEC tournament and earn an NCAA tournament berth for the first time since 2002. That thrust him into the national spotlight, where he's become the guy opposing fans love to hate.

Hit a 3-pointer to help bury Florida? Throw down a mocking "gator chomp."

Watching Kentucky lose in the NIT? Tell the world via Twitter that you think the Wildcats "don't wanna be there," and then point out, "I know I wouldn't wanna be playin in the NIT."

Kennedy has called the much-traveled junior guard's antics a "traveling circus," and then used another analogy Thursday, before the No. 12 seed Rebels hit the floor in the Sprint Center for their final practice before playing fifth-seeded Wisconsin in the West Region on Friday.

JOHN SLEEZER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ole Miss guard Marshall Henderson ends the Rebels' NCAA tournament practice with a dunk on Thursday at the Sprint Center in Kansas City. Ole Miss faces Wisconsin today.

"It's like watching NASCAR, waiting for the wreck," Kennedy said. "He's going real fast, oops, he didn't wreck there, another turn."

There have been plenty of wrecks in Henderson's checkered past.

He began his career at Utah, transferred to a junior college in Texas, and ultimately landed at Ole Miss after Kennedy assured him that the Rebels were primed to make the NCAA tournament.

Along the way, Henderson was arrested for a 2009 incident and charged with misdemeanor forgery after buying marijuana with counterfeit money. He was arrested again in 2011 and charged with misdemeanor possession of marijuana, even though he was already on probation at the time.

Court documents also show that Henderson failed tests for alcohol, marijuana and cocaine while on probation, though school officials said he's not had any problems at Ole Miss.

"Where I've been, it's been tough," Henderson said.

Does he relish being the villain?

"I guess so," he replied. "I don't really have a choice, do I?"

Henderson points out that he doesn't spend much time talking trash on the floor, not with opposing players or the referees. But fans? They're fair game.

"My favorite players in the NBA all do that stuff," he said. "J.R. Smith and Ja-Vale McGee, I love those kinds of players. They can put a crowd in the arena, sell some tickets, get the money for those people. That's what it's all about."

Henderson may be reviled by opposing fans, but he's beloved by the Rebels' — most of them, anyway. And he certainly has the support of his teammates, who appreciate his gamesmanship.

"When the crowds are talking trash to him, it helps him. So please, do it," said Ole Miss guard Nick Williams. "Everybody in the crowd, please, talk to Marshall. ... I beg you. That's when he goes out and gets 30. Please, keep doing this."

Senior forward Reginald Buckner said there's no jealousy among the Rebels that Henderson is prone to stealing the show. He understands that the 20 points he pours in every game are perhaps the biggest single reason his team is playing in the NCAA tournament.

"That's my guy, man. Ever since I've been here, one of my good friends," Buckner said. "But it's all love. I don't feel there's no jealousy."

Buckner also said it was a crime Henderson was left off the All-SEC first team.

"Maybe some coaches are like, 'He beat us, and he talked trash,'" Buckner said. "He led the SEC in scoring, he led his team to the NCAA tournament. ... He cared at first (about being left off), but after we won the championship, he was like, 'Yeah, I just proved myself.'"

That victory over Florida in the SEC title game only grew Henderson's lore.

"People didn't get to see it," Williams said, "but halftime, we're down 12, he just came into the locker room, sat down and put his hands behind his head, crossed his feet and said, 'Guys, we'll be OK.' He's usually like that. We're down, we feel like we can come back from any deficit."

Freese homers in return as Cardinals beat Mets

Wire reports

David Freese said his back still feels a bit stiff, but he didn't show any signs of lingering issues when he returned to the field for the first time in a week.

Freese led off the fourth inning with a long home run and the St. Louis Cardinals went on to beat the New York Mets 3-2 on Thursday.

Freese had been out since March 14 with back stiffness stemming from a hard fall he took while chasing a foul ball. The 2011 World Series MVP played five innings at third base.

"It's a little stiff, but I think that was expected," Freese said. "It's fine. I'll keep going and get ready."

Freese's home run came on a fastball from Mets starter Jeremy Hefner, who was starting in place of Shaun Marcum. Marcum received a cortisone shot in his shoulder Tuesday because of what he called tightness, and he said he expects to miss just one turn in the rotation.

Freese said he was a little surprised to get such a solid swing on a pitch so quickly in his return. He said he doesn't feel too far behind.

"I got a good swing on it," Freese said. "There were a couple guys smashing them today."

Cardinals starter Adam Wainwright got off to a smooth start, allowing just two runners through the first three innings. He made some adjustments after surrendering a two-run triple to Matt den Dekker in the fourth.

■ The New York Mets have made third baseman David Wright the fourth captain in team history.

The Mets made the announcement Thursday.

Wright joined Keith Hernandez, Gary Carter and John Franco as Mets to be appointed captain. Franco was the last player to hold the honor in 2004.

■ New York Yankees general manager Brian Cashman says shortstop Derek Jeter will play only in minor league spring training games for the rest of spring training.

The move could cut short how much time Jeter would miss if he starts the season on the 15-day disabled list. By not playing in major league exhibitions, the Yankees want to be able to backdate Jeter's start time on the DL if that's necessary.

Jeter missed his third straight exhibition game Thursday because of inflammation in his surgically repaired left ankle.

■ Dodgers shortstop Hanley Ramirez is scheduled to undergo surgery Friday on his right thumb and is expected to be sidelined for eight weeks.

An MRI indicated that Ramirez has a torn ligament in his thumb, the team said Thursday.

Ramirez was injured Tuesday night while playing for the Dominican Republic in its victory over Puerto Rico in the WBC championship game.

Shortage in mine, energy workers forecast

By Vicki Smith
Associated Press

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. – The United States isn't producing enough qualified workers to meet the future needs of the mining and energy sectors, from coal digging and gas drilling to solar and wind power, a new report says.

The report released Thursday by the National Research Council urges partnerships to tackle the problem of retiring Baby Boomers not readily replaced. That includes a retooling of education to produce more people competent in science, technology, engineering and math.

The report predicts a "bright present and future" for energy and mining jobs, with continuing demand for workers and good pay for those who are hired.

> "Unless this is corrected the nation risks losing its capacity to provide new science and engineering professionals for the workforce."
> National Research Council report

But it says some industries already face labor shortages and others soon will because the nation's colleges and universities aren't cranking out graduates with the skills that growing companies need.

Federal Mine Safety and Health Administration data, for example, show 46 percent of the workforce will be eligible to retire within five years, but there are too few younger workers in the pipeline to replace them.

The oil and gas industry, has a workforce concentrated at the older and younger ends of the spectrum, the report says, "creating a gap in experience and maturity" making it difficult to replace retiring leadership.

The report recommends several wide-ranging solutions, including outreach efforts to improve both the public's understanding and perception of energy-producing industries such as oil and gas.

Negative perception driven by concern over pollution, environmental damage and health issues, it notes, "dissuades some from pursuing careers."

It also notes that universities are seeing a faculty shortage that could affect oil and gas, mining and geothermal employers.

"Unless this is corrected," the report says, "the nation risks losing its capacity to provide new science and engineering professionals for the workforce."

The independent, nonprofit National Research Council is the main operating agency of the National Academy of Sciences.

It warns the higher education community that the traditional routes to degrees "do not adequately align" with industries' needs and notes "they are increasingly not affordable and accessible" for prospective students.

Community colleges are proving to be the best vehicle for delivering the technician-level, skills-based education the energy and mining industries need, the report says, offering programs ranging from one-year certifications to two-year associate's degrees.

Accuride, Vipar sign distribution deal

Gleaner staff

Accuride Corp. and Vipar Heavy Duty on Thursday jointly announced a new three-year agreement under which Vipar will continue to sell Accuride wheels, Gunite wheel-end components and Imperial Group products.

Vipar is North America's leading network of independent aftermarket truck parts distributors with more than 500 locations across North America.

Among the products covered by the agreement are heavy- and medium-duty steel wheels, which Accuride produces at its 155-employee plant in Henderson as well as at a plant in Monterrey, Mexico.

"This contract is good news for our Henderson facility, since the steel wheels we will produce for Vipar for heavy duty truck applications in the U.S. and Canada will be manufactured by our Henderson Operations associates," Accuride spokesman Timothy Weir said in statement.

"Vipar Heavy Duty has had a long-term relationship with Accuride Corp. in the U.S., Canada, and Mexico," said Steve Crowley, president and CEO of Vipar Heavy Duty. "This new agreement recognizes the strong commitment that Accuride continues to show in the aftermarket through their investment in the infrastructure and personnel to support this program."

Rich Dauch, president and CEO of Evansville-based Accuride, said in a statement that his company's "strategic focus on delivering more dependable performance for Vipar and our aftermarket customers led us to invest more than $150 million in operational improvements in our business in 2011-2013. The resulting step-change gains we're seeing in our quality, delivery and lead time performance make long-term agreements like this possible."

Briefs

NEW YORK

Sears CEO's salary $1, with bonuses

Sears Holding Corp. has signed a contract with Edward Lampert to keep him on as CEO of the company at a salary of $1 per year.

A regulatory document filed Wednesday shows that the billionaire hedge fund manager will be paid an annual base salary of $1, but with the opportunity for a bonus of up to $2 million in cash or stock and up to $4.5 million in stock per year.

A number of companies have given their top leaders a salary of $1 during tough times to demonstrate their commitment to a turnaround. Some are then also rewarded through performance-based bonuses to encourage results.

Sears announced in January that Lampert would take over as CEO after Louis J. D'Ambrosio stepped down due to health issues involving his family.

WASHINGTON

Home sales highest in more than 3 years

U.S. sales of previously occupied homes rose in February to their fastest pace in more than three years, and more people put their homes on the market. The increases suggest a growing number of Americans believe the housing recovery will strengthen.

The National Association of Realtors said Thursday that sales increased 0.8 percent in February from January to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 4.98 million. That was the fastest sales pace since November 2009, when a temporary homebuyer tax credit had boosted sales.

Company to leave state over gun laws

A Colorado company vowed to begin making ammunition magazines outside the state within the next month following the passage of sweeping gun control laws.

Magpul Industries said Wednesday it will make good on its previous threat to move to another state, according to the Denver Post. A search is under way to find a new location, the company said.

Magpul chief operating officer Doug Smith said the bill signed by Gov. John Hickenlooper prohibiting the sale of gun magazines with more than 15 rounds could seriously impact the company's business.

WASHINGTON

Average for jobless claims at 5-year low

The number of people seeking U.S. unemployment aid barely changed last week, while the average over the past month fell to a fresh five-year low. The decline in layoffs is helping strengthen the job market.

Weekly unemployment benefit applications rose just 2,000 to a seasonally adjusted 336,000, the Labor Department said Thursday.

Over the past four weeks, applications have dropped by 7,500 to 339,750. That's the lowest since February 2008, just three months into the recession.

ST. LOUIS

Cable firm won't air ads for antennas

A TV antenna maker wanted to use the competition's own medium — cable TV — for its anti-cable message. Now, officials at Antennas Direct say Charter Communications' refusal to air the ads is evidence of the cable industry's growing concern over antennas.

At issue are three 60-second spots that Antennas Direct of Ellisville, Mo., sought to air in the St. Louis market through Charter Communications on ESPN, the History Channel and other cable networks.

The ads encourage viewers to cancel cable and save money by buying an antenna. One shows a man chained, telling an unseen voice of a cable company, "You're gonna lose a ton of money when people realize they don't have to pay you just to watch TV."

Antennas Direct spokesman Scott Kolbe said Thursday that a Charter executive responded that the company would not run ads for "direct cable competitors."

Coca-Cola planning to cut 750 jobs

Coca-Cola says it's cutting 750 jobs in the U.S. as it continues to streamline its business.

The world's biggest beverage maker says the jobs cuts will be across the board and that affected individuals will be notified in coming weeks. The cuts represent roughly 1 percent of the company's workforce of 75,000 in North America.

A spokesman says about a quarter of the cuts will be in Atlanta.

30-year mortgage rate down slightly

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Average U.S. rates on fixed mortgages fell this week and remained near historic lows, a trend that has supported a recovery in housing.

Freddie Mac said Thursday that the average rate for the 30-year loan fell to 3.54 percent from 3.63 percent last week. That's near the 3.31 percent reached in November, which was the lowest on records dating to 1971.

The average rate on the 15-year fixed mortgage slipped last week to 2.72 percent from 2.79 percent last week.

Advice

Brother's behavior creates wedding drama

Dear Amy: My brother and his wife announced right after Christmas that they were getting a divorce. The split was ... not the greatest (he cheated).

My sister-in-law has become a good friend of mine and was supposed to be a bridesmaid in my wedding. Now she is no longer going to be a bridesmaid.

I have spoken to my brother about my intention to still have her come to the wedding as a guest if she's willing, and he has said he is totally fine with this.

Now my brother has told the family that he has someone new in his life who he thinks is going to be around for a long time.

My fiance and I haven't sent the wedding invitations out yet, but I'm not inclined to invite the new girlfriend.

However, if they are going to be serious, I don't want to start off another possible family relationship on the wrong foot.

If I do invite her, I know my sister-in-law would not come, and that would make me sad.

I haven't talked about this to any of the family yet, but I wanted to see what you think.

— Anxious

Dear Anxious: I'm assuming your brother's prospective wedding date is also the woman with whom he cheated on his wife.

Your sister-in-law knows that he is your brother and that to some extent you are stuck with some of the choices he makes in his life.

Your brother should create an opportunity for you to meet his date well before your wedding.

The basic protocol is to invite people in serious and/or long-term relationships to attend your wedding along with the primary guest.

You should be honest with your sister-in-law and tell her your brother is bringing a date. Encourage her to also bring a date.

She may choose not to attend, due to her own discomfort, but make sure she knows that you hope to maintain a friendship with her, regardless of what your brother does.

Chair cushion gives surgery patient comfort

Dear Heloise: I had surgery and have difficulty sitting in hard chairs for longer periods of time. When we go to restaurants, they often have wooden chairs.

I took a small chair cushion and placed it in a canvas tote. I keep it in my car. It is easy to carry inside, sit on and then take with me when I leave. No more uncomfortable meals.

— A Reader in Tennessee

Dear Heloise: I read in your column how to add fragrance to talcum powder. Well, silly me, my perfume fragrance came in dusting powder, so I did not save your directions. Would you mind reprinting your suggestion?

— Terry H. in Florida

Dear Terry: Making your own scented powder is a great way to save money!

Start with plain talc powder, baking soda or cornstarch, whichever you prefer, and fill the old container.

Spray or pour a little perfume on the powder. Seal the container tightly and leave overnight or longer. The powder will absorb the fragrance, and voila, your own dusting powder.

Let Easter, Christmas show you God's promises

Dear Rev. Graham: I suppose you'd call me a "Christmas and Easter" kind of Christian, because those are about the only days I go to church (except for weddings or funerals). Why should I bother doing any more?

— L.W.

Dear L.W.: Although I hope that someday you'll attend church more regularly, I'm thankful you haven't dropped out completely, and that you still make the effort to attend services on Christmas and Easter.

After all, Christmas and Easter commemorate two of the most important events in human history, and as you attend Easter services next week, I hope you'll pause to think more deeply about the meaning of these two days.

On Christmas, we celebrate the birth of Jesus, the divine Son of God who came from heaven to save us from our sins. He wasn't just a great man or only a profound teacher; He was God in human flesh!

At Easter, however, we remember His death on the cross for us. He was without sin, but on the cross all our sins were placed on Him, and He became the final sacrifice for our sins.

Now we are forgiven and cleansed of our sins as we put our faith and trust in Him.

Easter also reminds us that Jesus didn't stay in the tomb, but was raised from the dead by the power of God. And because He rose from the dead, we need not fear death if our faith is in Him.

Let these truths sink into your soul during this holy season, and then by faith commit your life to the One who died and rose again.

The Bible's promise is for you: "If you confess with your mouth, 'Jesus is Lord,' and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved" (Romans 10:9).

Erectile dysfunction common with coronary disease medicine

DR. KEITH ROACH
COLUMNIST

Dear Dr. Roach: When I had my first mild heart attack, in 1998, they used stents to open the blockages; they put in more a year later.

When I had my second heart attack, in 2009, they recommended bypass surgery.

However, the day I came home from the hospital there was an article that said prescription medications were just as good as surgery in cleaning up the blockages and keeping patients alive. I am now on eight prescription medications.

At about that time, I noticed that I had become impotent. I could not get an erection. I attributed it to my age (73), and since my wife was very ill with a brain tumor, it was of little concern.

Could my impotence be caused by the prescriptions rather than old age? If so, what can be done about it without interfering with the treatment for the heart blockages?

— E.S.

Dear E.S.: The decision to treat coronary disease with medications or surgery is a difficult one and depends on many factors — especially the arteries involved and the overall function of the heart.

For many people, medication is as effective as surgery. But medication always has the potential of side effects, and erectile dysfunction, to use the preferred term, is not uncommon with many medicines used for coronary disease or high blood pressure.

Balancing a medication's effectiveness with side effects can be tricky.

One approach is to take the most likely medication, such as a diuretic or a beta blocker, and change to another class of medication.

This runs the risk of reducing the effectiveness of the medication regimen for the blockages.

Another approach is to use an additional medication, such as Viagra, to overcome the side effects of the first.

This is inelegant, but may be the safest option. Note that nitroglycerine and related medications cannot be used with Viagra (or its related medicines).

The first step is to let your doctor know about this possible side effect.

Horoscope

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (March 22). Dance when you're asked, sing along, and when in doubt, say yes. Responses like these will hold you in good stead, as the year produces many spur-of-the-moment opportunities that are not to be missed. April and May bring new business and financial betterment. Your focus on one relationship makes June special. Aquarius and Scorpio people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 17, 35, 48, 20 and 11.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). How will you lull someone into your world? Good news! Right now, you don't even have to try. The planets are on your side, so just show up and make your offer.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). By tracking what happened before, you'll make a good guess as to what's coming next. You're excellent at detecting patterns and will use this skill to your advantage.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You like complicated people because they have an interesting point of view and usually add a spark of beauty, intellect or humor to your world. You also know better than to get too close.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You may feel that what's required of you is unfair. But the fact is that you are asked to do more because you are capable of more. Others see greatness in you, and they want to develop it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). The requests that are made of you may initially seem difficult to fulfill, but instead of protesting or waffling, you'll show your confidence by just saying yes. You'll figure it out as you go.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Your live-and-let-live policy is interrupted by someone who really does seem to need your insight and help. Tread carefully here. An egoless assist could make a huge difference in the life of another.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). The difference between a pro and an amateur is that the pro won't use as many words. Excuses, explanations and complaints aren't a part of the pro's repertoire.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Nothing good will come of forceful tools, attitudes and ways. A warm, soft style will help you stay connected to the people and things that make you feel safe.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Some people think that cheerful, relatable small talk is not intelligent. They're wrong. We're all affected by the weather, and talking about it might be the smartest way to build rapport.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Most of us want to avoid high-maintenance people and situations. If you want help, make it easy for others to get involved in what you're doing. If a task is too involved, it won't get done.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). If you find yourself thinking that you can do it later, that's called flinching. Flinching causes people to drop the ball. Use the moment in front of you. Assume you won't get another chance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Your creativity may get in the way of the logical statement you are trying to make. Let it interfere. There is a deep and trustworthy intelligence in your imagination.

Farming

Controlled drainage no substitute for irrigation, but can be beneficial

MIKE SMITH
UK AG EXTENSION AGENT

In the last several years dry conditions have turned more people to irrigation. Last year's irrigated crops yielded twice and in some instances three-times more than non-irrigated crops.

Not every place in the county is suitable for irrigation. Lack of water supply, suitable terrain, and costs are major factors that come into play when considering irrigation.

We also have a lot of ground that has been tiled. Tiling is a way farmers can dry fields out during wet periods and get more suitable planting conditions throughout the entire field at an earlier date. This practice is also catching on.

We will hear more about controlled drainage where the system allows us to choose when and when not to allow drainage.

Controlled drainage involves in-line structures added to the outlets of a subsurface drainage system. These structures allow the farm manager to artificially raise the outlet elevation and thus retain water in the field subsurface.

The outlet is not plugged nor is the outlet elevation raised to retain water up to the soil surface.

The controlled drainage structures are adjusted incrementally to raise the elevation from the bottom of a field main to within 12 to 24-inches of the soil surface, depending on the time of year.

Controlled drainage is flexible and allows for management operations year round.

Farmers need dry soils during planting season for various field operations.

These controlled drainage structures would be set to release water 30 to 40 days prior to planting and through completion of spring field operations.

The control structure would be set to conserve/retain water in the subsoil from rainfall so it could be used later during the growing season, during dry periods, and leave 12 to 24-inches of drained soil at the surface available for rainfall.

The structure is such that if excess rainwater is anticipated during the summer the water level can be lowered.

As harvest nears, the growing crop may have used all the water that had been retained or the levels can be lowered and let run freely to further lower the water level in the field.

The ability to somewhat control the water levels in a field would have been appealing last year.

You should remember though we are only controlling moisture when that moisture is available.

This is not a substitute for irrigation but could come in to play when we have those one to two-months of dry weather.

Research data shows modest crop yield increases and has been shown to significantly reduce nutrient run-off. A topic we will be hearing more and more about.

Information on these and other topics are available at your local Cooperative Extension Service office.

Production receipt deadline for ACRE program is July 15

PATTI KARN
COLUMNIST

Participants in the ACRE program need to bring their ACRE production receipts to the county office. The deadline to submit their production receipts is July 15.

FSA/NRCS FORM

Participants in FSA and NRCS programs are required to timely submit a correctly completed CCC-933 form. The CCC-933 form is called "Average Adjusted Gross Income (AGI) Certification and Consent to Disclosure of Tax Information."

All participants are reminded to complete this form to receive 2013 program benefits and to maintain payment eligibility for previous years 2009 through 2011.

The form is completed in the name and address of how you filed your IRS tax forms and power of attorney forms are not valid for this required form. The participant will sign the CCC-933 just as he signs on IRS tax forms. Stop in the office to complete this form.

FARM CHANGES

If you have bought or sold land, or if you have picked up or dropped rented land from your operation, make sure you report the changes to the office as soon as possible. You need to provide a copy of your deed or recorded land contract for purchased property. Failure to maintain accurate records with FSA on all land you have an interest in can lead to possible program ineligibility and penalties. Making the record changes now will save you time later.

Update signature authorization when changes in the operation occur. Producers are reminded to contact the office of a change in operations on a farm so the records can be kept current and accurate.

REMINDERS:

- Hispanic and Women Class Process: call 1-888-508-4429 or visit www.farmerclaims.gov. The deadline to file a claim is March 25.
- 2011 SURE signup is continuing now through June 7.
- 2013 Wheat needs to be reported now.
- Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) signup period will be May 20 through June 14.

Destructive porkers

■ $1 million USDA project aims to eradicate feral pigs

By Susan Montoya Bryan
Associated Press

A group of feral pigs protects a feeding area from livestock. Nationally, federal officials say the feral pig population has ballooned to an estimated 5 million.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – Using the cover of darkness, feral pigs have learned to outsmart even the most seasoned hunters as they set about on their nightly terrors, rooting up crops and suburban gardens, harassing native wildlife and turning watering holes into pigsties.

The invasive porkers have made themselves at home across more than three quarters of the U.S. and are responsible for an estimated $1.5 billion in damages each year. Most worrisome is their ability to learn from each encounter with a frustrated human.

Ask anyone who has had a run-in with feral pigs. The conversation always circles back to intelligence.

"They're much brighter than I am," said Ray Powell, a veterinarian and New Mexico's land commissioner. "If they had the dexterity, they'd be driving vehicles around. I mean these guys are really smart."

Feral pigs have already taken over Texas and are expanding their numbers in other states, but federal and state land managers think they have a chance to tip the balance in New Mexico. They're willing to bet $1 million in federal funds on a yearlong pilot project aimed at eradicating the pigs and using what they learn here to keep them from gaining a foothold elsewhere.

It marks the first time the U.S. Department of Agriculture has teamed up with a state to develop a comprehensive plan for getting rid of the pigs.

A small army of state and federal employees has been trained to stalk, trap and kill New Mexico's feral pigs. Various techniques have been used by wildlife managers and landowners for decades in the fight against feral swine, but the New Mexico team is focusing on determining what combination works best in which circumstances and how effectively helicopters can be to track the pigs across vast landscapes.

Timing is a big part of the project, said UDSA undersecretary Edward Avalos. Hitting the pigs quickly will prevent them from becoming more educated, he said.

Pigs have been known to scope out traps for days before sending in the group's lowest ranking members to test for danger. And if a trap isn't built just right, the pigs will find a way out, either by climbing over each other or squeezing under the fencing.

The plan calls for building special traps in strategic locations along with stalking the pigs at night.

The team will also be looking to the "Judas pig" for help. After trapping a family of pigs, all but one — usually an adult female — are shot and killed. The Judas pig is then fitted with a radio collar or microchip so it can be tracked as it looks for another group of pigs to hang out with.

This is important since feral pigs are quite elusive. Rarely seen during the day, they have learned to avoid being taken down by rifles or suckered into traps.

Their intelligence, in combination with their ability to mate year-round, is what has enabled wild pigs to evade capture and take over prairies, mountain valleys and rugged deserts from Canada to Mexico.

The wild pig population in the U.S. has ballooned to more than 5 million. In one year alone, federal managers trapped and killed more than 32,000 pigs from 28 states and collected thousands of samples to check for the nearly three dozen diseases feral pigs are capable of carrying and passing on to humans, livestock and other wildlife.

Smithsonian creating ag archive

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON – The Smithsonian's National Museum of American History is collecting stories about agriculture innovations for a future exhibition on American business.

The museum is launching a web portal Tuesday for people to share stories, photographs and materials about innovations that changed farming.

The museum also is accepting items already donated by farmers in Illinois, Tennessee and California for a new agriculture archive.

New artifacts include road signs about organic farming and decreasing soil erosion, a GPS tractor guidance system and dairy equipment showing the change to a computer-run system.

The museum also holds Eli Whitney's cotton gin.

Agribusiness will be part of a new exhibit on "American Enterprise" opening in 2015. Monsanto Co. recently donated $2 million, and the United Soybean Board gave $1 million to support the project.

UK conducting poultry litter study in Henderson

By KATIE PRATT
UK College of Agriculture

PRINCETON, Ky. – Previous research studies have shown poultry litter applications have many benefits for corn and soybean producers, but these benefits have not been quantified or integrated into one comprehensive research study.

UK College of Agriculture researchers are doing just that in a study that includes field work in Henderson and nearby counties.

UK extension soils specialist Edwin Ritchey is leading the study to explore whether poultry litter applications can increase yield, allow for better water infiltration, improve soil water-holding capacity and add organic matter to the soil in Western Kentucky corn and soybean operations.

He will also study whether one of the crops receives more value from the poultry litter, if nutrient values vary among poultry litter sources and if producers receive a yield boost from applying both poultry litter and nitrogen to their fields.

"This research should determine whether poultry litter, in addition to providing plant nutrients, can improve soil quality without (increasing problems with) insects, diseases and weeds," Ritchey said. "If it can, and if producers can economically obtain it, it might be preferred over a strict use of commercial fertilizers."

As part of the research, UK extension weed scientist Jim Martin and UK extension plant pathologist Don Hershman will study poultry litter's effect on weeds and disease pests, particularly the soybean cyst nematode.

"The soybean cyst nematode has been found in all major soybean producing counties in Kentucky, and it is the most damaging pest of soybean in the state, reducing state soybean productivity by 2 to 5 percent, depending on the year," Hershman said. "Up to 30 percent yield loss can occur without any visible symptoms being produced."

The study is funded by the Kentucky Soybean Promotion Board and the Kentucky Corn Growers Association.

In 2012, Ritchey selected four producers' fields in Henderson, Daviess, Hopkins and McLean counties for the study.

He selected these fields because they have low to medium nutrient values in the soil and soybean cyst nematodes.

The fields range in size from three to five acres.

Researchers gathered initial baseline data from the fields in 2012 and will sample the fields more intensively next week.

Researchers will apply poultry litter to two soybean fields — one each in Henderson and McLean counties — as well as one corn field in both Daviess and Hopkins counties this spring before planting.

They will collect data throughout the growing season, culminating with yield data at harvest.

Greenhouse research to test for the presence of the weed seed in poultry litter began in January at the UK Research and Education Center in Princeton, Ky.

Field research concerning whether poultry litter alters weed species or weed growth will begin this spring and continue throughout the season with the goal of collecting samples before the grower applies herbicides.

"There's some concern that poultry litter may contain weed seed, and by applying poultry litter, growers may introduce new and different weeds into a field," Martin said. "We're not sure if that's the case, so that's why we're testing the poultry litter in the greenhouse and in the field."

In addition, Ritchey received the results of the 2011 poultry litter nutrient tests conducted at the UK Soil Testing Laboratory in Lexington this winter.

He will analyze these results to see if the nutrient content varies among poultry age, type and integrators.

Deer bolts from car trunk past stunned officer

KALAMAZOO, Mich. – Talk about junk in the trunk.

A public safety officer checking a suspicious car parked behind a southwestern Michigan motel early Tuesday was more than a little surprised when a deer climbed out of the trunk, stumbled onto the road and bolted into nearby woods.

TV stations WWMT, WZZM and WOOD report that the driver told Kalamazoo officer David Miller he hit the deer on the road — thought he had killed it — and was taking it home for his family to eat.

Squad car dashboard camera footage shows Miller opening the trunk, then quickly trying to close it as he spots the deer. The animal escapes from the trunk, rear first, stumbles and rolls, then dashes off.

Thief returns $800 from 1980s burglary

HASTINGS, Mich. – A burglar expressing guilt about stealing $800 from a western Michigan store three decades ago has repaid the money, plus some interest.

The anonymous thief sent a note and $1,200 in $100 bills to the Barry County sheriff's department in Hastings, and they arrived Monday, WOOD-TV reported.

The writer admitted breaking into the Middle Mart in Thornapple Township about 30 years ago.

In a letter packed with emotion and spelling errors, the writer asks for "help in locating a man" to whom the writer owes the money.

"Anyways, I did a very bad thing that I am shamed of and have lived with this guilt," the writer said. "I can't begin to say how sorry iam but have lived with this guilt too long," the letter went on to say. "If you do find him, please tell him that I was afoolish stupid man when I did that and iam sorrie."

The letter was unsigned and had no return address.

The $1,200, while it includes some interest, falls short of making up for the loss in the dollar's purchasing power over the intervening years. The stolen $800 would be worth about $1,800 today, based on changes in the consumer price index.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE KPDES GENERAL PERMIT NO. KYG4000000 FOR INDIVIDUAL FAMILY RESIDENCES

Pursuant to Kentucky Revised Statute (KRS) 401 KAR 5:060, Section 8 the Division of Water proposes to issue a general permit for individual family residences.

KYG400000 Pursuant to (KRS) 224 and Chapters 5 and 10 of Title 401 of the Kentucky Administrative Regulations (KARs) the construction and operation of a wastewater treatment system receiving and treating domestic wastewaters requires a permit from the Division of Water (DOW). This general permit authorizes the owners of single family residences to construct and operate an On-Site Wastewater Treatment System (OSWTS) to treat and dispose of domestic waste only.

This is a reissuance of an existing general KPDES permit KYG4000000 addressing the

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, March 22, the 81st day of 2013. There are 284 days left in the year.

On this date:

In 1312, Pope Clement V issued a papal bull ordering dissolution of the Order of the Knights Templar.

In 1765, the British Parliament passed the Stamp Act of 1765 to raise money from the American colonies, which fiercely resisted the tax. (The Stamp Act was repealed a year later.)

In 1820, U.S. naval hero Stephen Decatur was killed in a duel with Commodore James Barron near Washington, D.C.

In 1933, during Prohibition, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed a measure to make wine and beer containing up to 3.2 percent alcohol legal.

In 1943, the Khatyn Massacre took place during World War II as German forces killed 149 residents of the village of Khatyn, Belarus, half of them children.

In 1963, The Beatles' debut album, "Please Please Me," was released in the United Kingdom by Parlophone.

In 1988, both houses of Congress overrode President Ronald Reagan's veto of the Civil Rights Restoration Act.

In 1993, Intel Corp. unveiled the original Pentium computer chip.

Ten years ago: Anti-war activists marched again in dozens of cities, marshaling well over 100,000 in Manhattan and sometimes trading insults with backers of the U.S.-led war on Iraq. U.S. forces reported seizing a large weapons cache in Afghanistan.

Five years ago: Vice President Dick Cheney, visiting the Middle East, said the U.S. had an "enduring and unshakable" commitment to Israel's security and its right to defend itself against those bent on destroying the Jewish state.

One year ago: Coroner's officials ruled singer Whitney Houston died by drowning the previous February, but that heart disease and cocaine use were contributing factors.

THINK ABOUT IT

"Kindness consists in loving people more than they deserve."

— Joseph Joubert, French moralist (1754-1824).

THE LOCKHORNS

THE FAMILY CIRCUS

"I would've done better on the test but it asked all the wrong questions."

HERMAN

"Now that you've cut off my electricity, how do you expect me to find my checkbook in the dark?"

7 p.m. on 25
Last Man Standing

Star Tim Allen is reunited with another of his "Home Improvement" co-stars in the season finale. Jonathan Taylor Thomas guest stars as Jon, a former co-worker of Kristin's (Amanda Fuller) at the diner. The news that he's now a successful restaurant owner, coming on top of Mandy's (Molly Ephraim) acceptances to two colleges, has Kristin taking stock of her own life in "College Girl." Nancy Travis also stars.

7 p.m. on 14
Fashion Star

Where are those magic jeans from "The Sisterhood of the Traveling Pants" when we need them? In this new episode, the designers are given the difficult task of creating a piece that will flatter any shape and size. One is under more pressure than usual to make a sale this week, having failed to do so the week before. Unable to decide whom to send home, the mentors make a surprising decision in "Something for Everyone."

Russell Hornsby

7 p.m. on (NG)
Lost Gold of the Dark Ages: Revealed

This new special tells the story of how an amateur metal-detecting enthusiast discovered a gold hoard of 3,500 artifacts dating back more than a millennium and valued at more than $5 million. Historians try to solve the mystery of whom the gold belonged to and why it was buried.

7:31 p.m. on 25
Malibu Country

While the online date her family sets her up on doesn't quite go as planned, it's enough to convince Reba (Reba McEntire) that getting back into the dating scene might not be a bad thing. Stacy Keach guest stars in the season finale, "All You Single Ladies." Lily Tomlin, Sara Rue, Justin Prentice and Juliette Angelo also star.

8 p.m. on 25
Shark Tank

Lori and Daymond compete for a piece of a California woman's line of dresses made from pillowcases. Another woman pitches a special-purpose spatula with a comical name. The Sharks also hear presentations from a father and son with an unusual vitamin line and a man with a waffle product that promises an energy boost. This episode also revisits the Pikoff brothers, who appeared in Season 2 with a mobile entertainment business.

8 p.m. on 14
Grimm

While investigating a woman's death from a mysterious case of blindness, Nick and Hank (David Giuntoli, Russell Hornsby) discover a Wesen that feeds off the tears of its victims. Adalind (Claire Coffee) evaluates the meaning of her new situation. Juliette (Bitsie Tulloch) continues working with Rosalee (Bree Turner) on fixing her memory in the new episode "Mr. Sandman." Silas Weir Mitchell also stars.

8 p.m. on 7
Cult

Jeff and Skye (Matt Davis, Jessica Lucas) attend a "Cult" costume party dressed as Billy and Kelly after hearing that a friend of Nate's might be planning something at the event. During the party, Skye's drink is spiked with a hallucinogen similar to one used on the show, Roger (Robert Knepper) meets a mysterious stranger (Jeffrey Pierce), and Sakelik (Aisha Hinds) tells Jeff he might be in over his head in the new episode "The Kiss."

8 p.m. on 9
From Dust to Dreams: Opening Night at the Smith Center for the Performing Arts

"Lost Gold of the Dark Ages: Revealed"

Neil Patrick Harris hosts this unforgettable two hours of music from the Las Vegas venue. Collaboration is the order of the evening as Pat Monahan of Train joins Martina McBride to sing "A Song for You," Carole King gets some help with "You've Got a Friend" from her friend Mavis Staples, and Jennifer Hudson joins King and McBride on "Natural Woman." Willie Nelson, Merle Haggard and violinist Joshua Bell also perform.

8 p.m. on (AP)
Tanked

New episodes resume with "Pranks and Dranks," which finds Wayde and Brett summoned to Los Angeles to create a custom aquarium for Jeff Tremaine of "Jackass" fame. Later, they're off to the Tropical Smoothie Cafe in Florida, whose owner wants a large aquarium modeled on a smoothie cup.

8 p.m. on (Z)
Spartacus: War of the Damned

With Spartacus (Liam McIntyre) and his rebel forces at a crossroads and Crassus (Simon Merrells) driving his own men hard in pursuit, the conflict between Caesar and Tiberius (Todd Lasance, Christian Antidormi) grows more intense in the new episode "Separate Paths."

Jai Rodriguez

9:30 p.m. on (HK)
Frasier

Frasier (Kelsey Grammer) was only trying to be a nice guy when he offered a ride to that poor woman waiting in the rain. Next thing you know, he's under arrest for picking up a prostitute. It's just one of several events that seem to be conspiring to shatter his faith in human nature — and complicate his relationship with Frederick (Trevor Einhorn). David Hyde Pierce also stars in "Good Samaritan."
